The organs of the human body are, of course, widely different in actual composition from the tissues of the plant, but at the same time, as Dr. MacDougal has shown, the living matter of which they are composed is a pentosan-protein mixture with some fatty material all in a colloidal condition and showing a kind of reaction to be expected from the nature and proportions of the constituents. Here, therefore, as in all phases of biology which deal directly with fundamental properties or reactions of living matter, the principles laid down will prove to be of great importance.

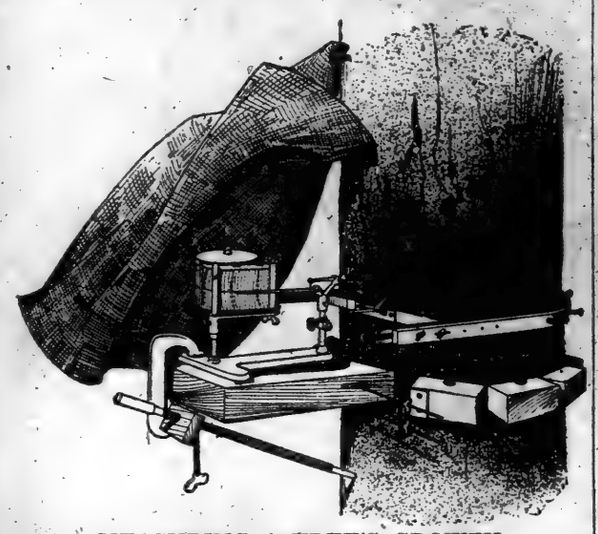
The essential part of this instrument is a metal yoke of an alloy which is but little affected by temperature. This yoke is fastened around the tree in such manner that two rigid contact points are held against the trunk on one side, and any change in volume of the tree trunk causes a third movable contact pin to move a lever, bearing a pin, by which the tree traces a diary of its action on a slip of paper carried by a drum revolved by clockwork.

Only six of these instruments have so far been constructed, and two of these have been placed under the supervision of co-operating specialists at the Missouri Botanical Garden in St. Louis, and at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore. Wide differences in the manner of growth of trees of different kinds have already been found, and these measurements when carried to an advanced stage may be expected to yield much of practical interest in the physics of tree growth, and will also throw some light on the unsolved problems of the ascent of sap.



MEASURING A TREE'S GROWTH

Dendrograph making record of the variations in a pine tree to which it is attached. The temperature of the growing part of the tree is read through the small clinical thermometer thrust through the bark, and the variation in thickness is traced by the pen on a paper carried by a recording cylinder.

GOVERNMENT LIFE INSURANCE.

ADVANTAGES of the new life insurance policies to be issued by the Government to soldiers and sailors, as compared with policies generally issued by private companies, are being set forth by Federal officials as follows:

Less expensive.

No medical examination required.

No restrictions as to residence, occupation, or military service.

Liberal disability benefits containing a very broad definition of disability and no restrictions as to age or occupation.

Disability benefits are free instead of being charged in the premium.

Beneficiary may be changed at will, but the insurance is protected from creditors. (This cannot be done, under the law, by private companies.)

Free from all taxation.

Premiums may be paid monthly, quarterly, semi-annually, or annually without extra charge for expense of collection.

Liberal reinstatement provisions.

Proceeds paid to beneficiary in instalments instead of one lump sum.

Nonforfeiture values are guaranteed after one year instead of three years, and paidup insurance values will participate in dividends.

Policyholders will share in dividends (as do policyholders of mutual companies).

In all the endowment policies, if the insured is living at the date when the policy matures, he may draw the entire amount of insurance in one sum. In case of death, however, the payments to the beneficiaries will be made in monthly instalments. In this way the beneficiary will receive more money and will receive it in the safest way.

SAFEGUARDING CHILDREN.

COMPULSORY health is as essential for children as compulsory education, according to Mrs. W. Albert Pease, Jr., Chairman of the Hempstead-Garden City Red Cross. Health rules are to be enforced in that section of Nassau County as a phase of reconstruction. Mrs. Pease, in outlining her organization's plans, says:

"Hot lunches for school children, weighing to determine their needs, and intensive anti-tuberculosis work in the homes are all essential factors in the after-war program placed upon the Red Cross. We must see that the child is aided to grow strong. In this way the country will grow strong."

"BAREBACK" GOWNS.

WOMEN in England do not need a Mrs. James Griswold Wentz to tell them that there are certain kind of gowns which are not the thing. They have decided unaided, and have given the gown to which they take special exception a name which, while it is suggestive of the circus, is sufficiently descriptive. They call it the "bareback" gown.

Over here it would be décolleté with a low-cut back, but the English women are frank. They don't like that kind of gown and Paris itself cannot make them wear it.

Mrs. Wentz, who is a club woman in New York and for many years President of the Women's Republican Club, has been shocked recently by the indelicacy of the American woman's gowns. She objected to them even in the shop windows and put the shopkeepers in a panic by forming a committee to spy at the windows and see whether there was displayed in them lingerie which had a suggestion of insufficiency or undue transparency.

Women may look into the windows of English shops without tremors. The shopkeepers themselves speak with a high moral tone of these frocks. It is true those now in America have a certain scantiness, and the woman who wears a "bareback" gown to the theatre, if it also chances to be minus even the tiny straps that sometimes serve for sleeves, does not seem to the audience behind to be wearing any kind of gown. Not a thread of textile or lace is visible.

At an exhibition of gowns recently made in England a member of a large firm showing them said coldly:

WAR RISK COMPENSATION.

UNDER Subdivision 5, Section 302, of the War Risk Insurance act, apportionment of compensation for disability is granted (1) where the disabled person and his wife are not living together and (2) where the children are not in the custody of the disabled person. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance has recently issued a regulation prescribing rules as to apportionment as follows.

"Compensation for disability, payable under Section 302 of the War Risk Insurance act, whenever so required by Subdivision 5 of such section, shall be apportioned in accordance with the following table:

Where There Is a Disabled Person and Wife (no child)	Portion for Disabled Person.	Portion for Wife.	Children.
	2-3	1-3
Wife, 1 child	6-11	3-11	2-11
Wife, 3 children	6-15	3-15	6-15
Wife, 4 children	11-30	5-30	4-30
Wife, 5 children	5-15	2-15	8-15
No wife, 1 child	3-4	...	1-4
No wife, 2 children	3-5	...	2-5
No wife, 4 children	9-20	...	1-20
No wife, 5 children	5-12	...	7-12

"As between children the compensation shall be divided in equal shares.

"The foregoing table is not applicable in cases where compensation at the rate of $100 per month is payable, but in such cases the apportionment shall be made by the bureau on the particular facts presented."

UNSCRAMBLING TURKISH EMPIRE

Problems Presented at Paris of Vital Interest to Us, Although We Have No Direct Voice in Them

WHEN Turkey's peace delegation arrived in Paris the problem as to what should be done about the Turkish Empire came to the fore.

Before Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia were considered subjects for a peace conference, Turkey was a problem, known for decades as the plague spot of Europe, and she brings complicated questions to the decision of the Peace Conference. But for the jealousies of the European powers, in the fear that the balance of power would be tipped heavily one way, the Turk, always an alien in Europe, would have been long ago driven into Asia, where he belongs; and of all questions the foremost now in the eyes of the world is whether, with an opportunity for final ejection never before possessed, the Sultan is to remain in Constantinople.

Next to this and closely related to it, in America at least, is the question, What is to be done about Armenia? Indications at Washington are that this decision of the Peace Conference as to Shantung is resented as unfair, and if by any compromise an unpopular decision should be made as to Armenia there would be an outburst of censure out of all comparison with that evoked by Shantung, for in the church world of America subscriptions have been collected for two decades to provide for oppressed Armenia, with its recurrent Turkish massacres, and Armenia is a sort of household word.

Interest in Armenia.

Twenty thousand ministers, 85 Bishops, 250 college and university Presidents, and 40 Governors have cabled a petition to the President that he win independence for integral Armenia. There is a strong sentiment throughout the country, it appears at Washington, in favor of an Armenia absolutely free from any association with the Turk, even to a joint mandate over an autonomous Turkey and Armenia, that would preserve the administrative unity of Turkey.

At the same time the practical difficulties of establishing an independent Armenian republic are seen to be many. The Armenians are intelligent, possessing those qualities which go with advanced civilization, and have furnished many administrators of the first class to the Turkish Empire, but in more than twenty centuries they have had few lessons in racial self-reliance, enjoying in that long stretch of history not more than 100 years of freedom. Their political sense will have to be developed, and in order to insure stability of Government a considerable period of wardship—that is, under a mandatary of the League of Nations—is forecast.

There are but two of the many questions to be decided in the settlement of the Turkish Empire problem. There are not only complications of much-mixed races, with large districts where the most numerous are in the minority, but there also runs at a different angle over the whole in the complication of two religions, and here stand out, in another aspect, the first question, Shall the Sultan be removed from Constantinople? And if he is not removed shall he be shorn of temporal power, like a sort of Mohammedan Pope, and be restricted to a small territory within the shadow of Yildiz Kiosk, the sacred edifice of the Mohammedans?

Were this the decision of the Allies, would the Sultan consent to remain in Constantinople on these terms?

Great Britain's Concern.

Great Britain has the greatest number of Mohammedans under her flag, though we have some in the Philippines, and there have already been protests in India and a widespread ominous muttering, according to reports, against ousting the Sultan from Constantinople. By some this is ascribed to the Germans, but there is no doubt that what appears to be a dangerous menace of unrest among the Mohammedans of the British Empire has made an impression on the British representative at the Peace Conference and, according to reports reaching Washington from Paris, they favor, for the present at least, leaving the Sultan in Constantinople with an independent city under a mandatary of the League of Nations.

In the British Army, both in Egypt and India, there are many native regiments composed of soldiers of Mohammedan faith, some of whom fought bravely in Europe, with a marked temper for reacting powerfully to religious excitement. In addition, in setting forth this side of the case, the English attribute their success as colonizers to the fact that they have never gone counter to the religion of a native people under their control.

In the settlement of Turkish questions the United States has no direct voice, as we did not declare war on that country, but on this issue, according to reports from Paris, we occupy a middle ground, with no strong opposition to permitting the Sultan to remain in Constantinople, for religious reasons alone, after the internationalization of the city. The French, on the contrary, took up the question from an opposite standpoint, that with French and British troops in control of Constantinople and also in Asiatic Turkey no such thing as a Turkish Empire remained and that therefore the settlement of the problem could be taken up by directly dealing with the elements that composed the former empire.

Now as to the various territorial claims set up: The Turkish delegation desires to see the Turkish Empire remain intact and has expressed a willingness (if not alacrity) to give local autonomy to Syria, Armenia, Palestine, and Mesopotamia. The man at the head of the Turkish delegation is the brother-in-law of the Sultan, having married that ruler's sister. Another prominent member of the delegation is Riza Tewfik Bey, Minister of Finance and for years Governor General of the Turkish Empire. He is the expert financial man of the delegation. Financial matters have an important place in the problem, for before the Germans took over domination of the Turkish Empire Great Britain made the principal loans to Turkey.

The German Bugaboo.

A main plea of the Turkish representatives will be that they are entitled to the favorable consideration of the Allies in order to check the influence and activity of the Young Turks, who are thoroughly Prussianized and will, it is contended, continue to work to undermine authority that is opposed to the Germans. But however enticingly presented there is no chance of the Turkish Empire remaining intact, no matter how well guarded an autonomy be promised to the several parts. The nearest to this possibly, according to reports from Paris, would be a joint mandatary, one over Constantinople, one over Anatolia, (the Turkey of the future,) and the other over Armenia each of these to have a separate autonomous government, but, in order to secure certain advantages of a unified administration, to have a Governor General over all.

This plan the Armenians will oppose. They contend that in such a scheme the Turks, with their skill at intrigue, would soon obtain an overshadowing influence, if they did not possess it at the start. What the Armenians want is an independent Armenia, under the United States as mandatary, until they are well on their feet. The Armenians in Russia, in the Black Sea territory, have formed a republic. They claim more than 20,000 square miles of territory and a population of over 1,000,000. It is desired by the Armenians to add this to Turkish Armenia and thus connect Armenian territory from the Black Sea down to the Mediterranean and also to include Silicia and the littoral of Trebizonde, Therein, it is estimated, there would be a population of more than 3,600,000 Armenians as against an alien population of 1,800,000; that is, on this basis, a population 65 per cent. Armenian.

This is a high rate in applying the principle of self-determination to the parts of the Turkish Empire. In Constantinople it is said that the Greeks are most numerous though in a minority, and in Anatolia, which would be set aside for a Turkish Government, there would be a large percentage of aliens. With the racial lines drawn, however, it is figured co-nationalists would seek their own land, and the Armenians hope to add 1,000,000 to their population in this way.

Mandatary Question.

Great as is the sympathy of this country for Armenia, there are signs of opposition to our taking a mandatary for any part of Turkey, or the whole of it, on account of the known unstable conditions that will exist there for some years to come. President Wilson has stated in Paris that he would not accept a mandatary without first consulting the United States Senate, and it is considered by some that to accept such mandatary would make the acceptance by this country of the League of Nations much more difficult. The chief reason for the apparently growing disinclination to faraway and precarious mandatories is that it might necessitate the keeping of our soldiers there, though the League of Nations constitution states that the holder of the mandatary is not to be called upon to supply soldiers, those needed being supplied from the natives. If we decline the mandatary it is likely to go to Great Britain, though that would not be pleasing to either France or Italy, for both these countries have expectations profitably to share in the breakup of the Turkish Empire.

Syria's claimants are in conflict with its mixed population of Phoenicians, Greeks, Arabs and Turks and other strains, Arabic ruling however as the language. Some Syrians want an absolutely independent Syria. Others desire a French mandatary, others a British and others an American. From the first proceedings of the Peace Conference France has claimed Syria, just as the Italians made a demand for control over Anatolia. Syria has the problem of two religions. Most of the inhabitants of older origin, such as the Phoenicians and Greeks, are Christians, while those who came in later are followers of Islam. If the Turks have to get out of Constantinople, and there is no doubt their final exit would be approved in this country, either Konia or Brusso, near the Sea of Marmora, would be the capital of pared-down Turkey, it is thought.

Asia Minor Hodge-Podge.

To the Jews has been promised Palestine. Between Armenia and Mesopotamia is Kurdestan, with a population of probably 1,500,000 Kurds. Their leaders have asked for autonomy or semi-independence. There are many wild tribes among them and it is thought a mandatary of at least the second class will be required for them. This the British would like to hold, but there is no doubt that opposition would arise from the French and the Italians as that land adjoins Mesopotamia, and it seems accepted that Great Britain will be given sway over Mesopotamia. Under the Turks a country with soil as rich as that of the Nile has gone down to desolation and unproductiveness. The British will reclaim it with great irrigation works.

The Assyrians in Eastern Turkey and some of Mesopotamia have also presented territorial claims with the desire of becoming autonomous. They are more likely to be accorded self-government in a larger unit. The Greeks are also counting on territorial control of part of the Turkish Empire, on the west coast of Asia Minor. They recently landed troops at Smyrna and Aivvali, old Greek cities, and have taken possession of the hinterland where Greeks predominate, with the approval of the Allies, it is presumed.

If the Turks are narrowly restricted to Anatolia, as now seems probable, they will be reduced to a territory with a total population of less than 7,000,000, it is estimated. Before the war the Turkish Empire had a population of 20,000,000, according to German statistics, and comprised 1,793,000 kilometers. During the war it is estimated that 2,600,000 Turks and 1,000,000 Armenians perished; in addition to these many thousands of Syrians, Arabs, Greeks and Assyrians. There is a kind of retribution gathering over the centuries in the cooping up of the Turks in Anatolia, for after great adventures in plunder and rapine nearing 500 years in extent they will find themselves returned to the restricted hill country from which the Osmanli Turks, sword in hand, issued and overran one country after another, until at one time they menaced the whole of Europe. It is a great downfall from the zenith of what their power once was to their state of today, when the representatives of the once proud Turkish Empire are received at Paris in a "cloakroom," according to a cable from Paris, and to students of history is a proof of a justice in the world, slow but sure, that judges nations as well as men.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

A novel decision in opposition to the generally accepted legal theory that the Indians had no title to the soil they occupied, but that their right was one of mere occupancy, has been made by the Supreme Court of the United States in Lane v. Pueblo of Santa Rosa. The decision distinguishes the Pueblo Indians as one tribe of that roving race who, in some instances, had developed sufficient civilization to have evolved a satisfactory title to the soil occupied by it. In this case Secretary Lane, the defendant, is sought to be enjoined from advertising for sale lands belonging to the Pueblo of Santa Rosa as public lands of the United States. These lands comprise some 440,000 acres and are within the region acquired from Mexico under what is known as the Gadsden Treaty of Dec. 30, 1853. The court said:

"The plaintiff is an Indian town whose inhabitants are a simple and unimpressed people, measurably civilized and industrious, living in substantial houses and engaged in agricultural and pastoral pursuits. Its existence, practically as it is today, can be traced back through the period of Mexican rule into that of the Spanish Kings. It was known then, as now, as the Pueblo of Santa Rosa, and its inhabitants were known then, as now, as Pueblo Indians. During the Spanish, as also the Mexican, dominion it enjoyed a large measure of local self-government and was recognized as having capacity to acquire and hold lands and other property. With much reason this might be regarded as enabling and entitling it to become a suitor for the purpose of enforcing or defending its property interests."

The court further found that the Indians of this pueblo were further protected in their title by the Gadsden Treaty providing that "the inhabitants of any Indian pueblo having a grant or concession of lands from Spain or Mexico should be a body corporate, and as such capable of suing or defending in respect of such lands."

The test of testamentary capacity is whether testator had sufficient mind and memory to remember who were the natural objects of his bounty, and to recall to mind his property and make disposition thereof understandingly, according to some plan formed in his mind, and not whether he had capacity to transact ordinary business.—Dewdey v. Palmer, Ill., 122 N. E. 102.

A New York bottling concern was convicted of having in its possession and offering for sale as a beverage bottled strawberry soda adulterated by the use of one-one hundredth per cent. of saccharin. The Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court in People v. Excelsior Bottling Works, 171 New York Supplement, 735, reversed the conviction and dismissed the information. One of the holdings was to the effect that, as saccharin was not injurious to health, its use in food products might be regulated, but could not be prohibited.

The uncontroverted evidence showed that the use of soda water as a beverage containing one-one hundredth of 1 per cent. of saccharin cannot possibly be injurious to health, and that there is greater danger of injury to health from consuming too much sugar than from the use of saccharin in such a percentage. It also appears that the use of sugar in any form is injurious to people suffering from diabetes and some other diseases, while the use of saccharin by them to flavor food and render it palatable is prescribed by medical authorities. The opinion was written by Judge Laughlin.

SERBIA'S WAR RECORD.

Her Official Report Shows Nearly 370,000 Men Lost in the Fighting in Southeastern Europe

THE General Staff of the Serbo-Croato-Slovene Army has compiled a history of the military efforts of their troops which was presented to the Peace Conference at Paris.

The history begins with the attack of the Austrian forces on Serbian towns along the Save and the Danube. It is interesting to know that the Austrian expedition sent into Serbia was known as the "Strafexpedition," "Punishment Expedition." At the beginning the Austrian Army contented itself with bombarding the towns along the Danube and the Save. A little later, however, on the 13th of August, they planned a powerful offensive with a view to crossing over to the other side of the two rivers of Serbia. The Serbians were massed in a strong line reaching from Valjevo, through Arangjeloatz to Palanka, and in the battle that followed completely routed the enemy.

Shortly after this success, the Serbians concentrated their forces and established offensive positions along two fronts, one on the banks of the Save in Syrmia and one in Bosnia in the direction of Serajevo. The first offensive attack met with success. The whole of Syrmia fell into the hands of the Serbians. The second, however, was less fortunate. The Montenegrin troops who were fighting at the side of the Serbs reached the gates of Serajevo, but were held back at the Drina by a counterattack launched by the Austrians. The army in Syrmia then abandoned its position and came to the help of the forces on the Drina.

Here the two forces engaged in a series of battles which lasted for fifty days. The superiority of the enemy forces in number of troops and artillery finally told, and the Serbs were obliged to retreat and abandon the city of Belgrade. During the whole month of November they retired step by step, fighting as they fell back.

North of the positions of Gornji-Milanovatz-Kraguyevatz and Mladenovatz they stopped, and reorganized. As soon as the first consignment of 30,000 shells came from France, they launched a counterattack, and in a few days had routed the enemy, taking from the Austrians 40,000 prisoners, 300 cannon and a wealth of other war material. However, the heavy casualties of the fighting and the epidemic of typhus which swept through the army had so thinned their ranks that the Serbs could not follow up their success.

By calling two new classes of soldiers, the ranks were filled up and preparations were made for new offensives on the Save and Drina. The retreat of the Russian army in August, 1915, greatly modified this situation, however, and the Bulgarians, with the help of Austria-Hungary and Germany, began an offensive on a wide front against the Serbs.

In the beginning of October, 1915, the attack against Serbia was made on three different sides on a front exceeding 1,000 kilometers, by enemy forces three times the strength of Serbia's own.

The Bulgarian army, consisting of some 400,000 combatants, attacked from the east. By this time Serbia had been abandoned by the Greeks, the allied army had been slow to come to her assistance and she had to choose between alternatives. Either she could capitulate and declare herself beaten, or make a last effort to retain her military integrity by retreating through the almost impassable mountains of Albania. The latter course was chosen.

After going through indescribable suffering in the mountain wastes of the country, the troops were finally met by the allied forces of the French and the British. The Serbian army was then transferred to Corfu.

Up to the retreat through Albania the Montenegrins fought courageously at the side of the Serbs. At that juncture, however, their army capitulated and the enemy forces occupied the whole of Montenegro.

At Corfu the Serbian army which, at that time, had been reduced to 150,000 men, was organized into six infantry divisions and one cavalry division, and transported to the Saloniki front.

The arrival of the Serbian army on the new front was marked by a series of small engagements with the Bulgarians. In August the Bulgarians opened an offensive in the environs of Monastir with a view of preventing Rumania from entering the war on the side of the Allies and to separate the allied army from Greece, thus giving the latter a favorable occasion to attack the Allies. The enemy forces were, however, repulsed. A little later Serbian troops undertook an energetical offensive which lasted for three months. With the help of the allied forces Monastir was liberated and a part of Serbia was cleared of the occupation of the enemy. On account of the weakening of the Serbian and allied forces, it was impossible, however, to pursue this victory; 40,000 men had been killed or wounded, the reinforcements of the Jugoslav volunteers were slow in coming and the Serbian command had been obliged to cut out an infantry regiment in every division.

Two attempts of a partial offensive on the Serbian front in 1917 did not succeed. The allied army at Saloniki was weak in numbers and artillery. The Bulgarians, on the other hand, were being continually reinforced by German regiments and powerful artillery.

The Serbian General Headquarters at the Paris conference in March, 1916, urged the importance of the Balkan front and pointed out the great results to be gained from victory.

These memoranda did not bring forth the desired results, but they were of value to the extent that the expectation of a concerted effort welded together a new division composed of Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes, all former Austrian soldiers who had surrendered to the Russian armies. In addition a new division of Jugoslav volunteers was added to the Serbian army in the Spring of 1917. The Russian revolution and the events which followed it on the Russo-Rumanian front caused those troops to cease their fight on this front. The Serbian Government and the Serbian G. H. Q. then requested the Allies to transport this army to the front of Saloniki. Difficulties, political and technical, delayed this transport until the Spring of 1918, when it was accomplished partly by way of Archangel, partly through Vladivostok. These troops were then reduced nearly by half, i. e., to only one division, owing to the propaganda of the Russian Bolsheviki and the difficulties of supplies and transport.

Early in 1918 the arrival of thousands of Jugoslav volunteers from America and France, and a smaller number from Italy, greatly strengthened the Serbian army.

The great enemy offensive on the western front, however, together with the peace that had been concluded with Russia and Rumania, put the allied armies of Saloniki in a very serious situation. The enemy could, in a relatively short time, bring reinforcements sufficient for undertaking a powerful offensive on the Saloniki front, while the allied army not only could not be reinforced but had actually been weakened by the withdrawal of the Russian division, of a British cavalry brigade and a British infantry division.

The Greek army was going through a period of organization and armament, and no help could be expected from their side.

The Serbian army, after two years of interrupted combat, expected to have its front restricted to a small area. Lack of sufficient forces, however, made it necessary for them to stretch the front and to elaborate numerous works of defense and fortifications in order to cover Saloniki and the Greek territory.

By the beginning of September all preparations were completed and the Serbian army, helped by two divisions of the French army, launched their great offensive. After a struggle of forty-eight hours the front of the enemy was pierced and the Serbian advance began.

In five days the Serbs realized an advance of 38 miles on a front of 16 miles. In a fortnight the Bulgaro-German army had been beaten and cut in two, the Serbian forces had advanced into Bulgarian territory and brought about the final capitulation of that country.

The result of this offensive gave the Allies 90,000 prisoners and more than 800 cannon. The First Serbian Army, which at the beginning had made the advance into enemy territory alone, was soon joined by the Second Army and the French cavalry and French artillery.

At the frontiers of Serbia the armies were met by three German-Austro-Hungarian divisions and two Austro-Hungarian divisions. After a two days' fight near Vranie the 9th Austro-Hungarian Division was completely routed and the march to Nish continued. There was a three-day battle at that city before it was finally delivered from the hands of the enemy.

After forty-five days of unceasing fighting and forced marches, during which the First Serbian Army covered 440 miles without any revictualing and boots, they arrived on the banks of the Save and the Danube and liberated the whole of Serbia and her capital, Belgrade.

At the same time the other troops of the Serbian army were beating the last remnants of the Austrian-Hungarian army in Albania. Scutari and the whole of Montenegro were subsequently delivered.

The offensive which was started on Sept. 15 carried a wonderful tale of conquests in its wake. Skoplje was taken on Sept. 26, Vranie on Oct. 4, Leskovatz the 7th, Nish the 13th, Paratchin the 23d, Pozharevatz and the Danube reached on the 28th. On Nov. 2 the Serbian troops entered Belgrade. On the 14th they terminated the war and entered Temeshevar, Arad, Zagreb, Liubliana, Fiume, Dubrvnik, and Cattaro, thus achieving the deliverance of all of Jugoslavia.

The losses that Serbia sustained during the war were enormous. Of the 800,000 men who fought in the Serbian army, 292,342 were killed or died of wounds or sickness. Together with these 77,278 men were counted as missing during the retreat through Albania, making a total of 369,620 lost through active participation in the war.

The losses in the civil population are even greater; 630,000 people are reported as having died in the concentration camps maintained by the Austrians. When the final count is made it is believed that Serbia will have lost over one million of her population in the war. This is more than one-fifth of the total population of the kingdom of Serbia.

JAPANESE IN SIBERIA

French Publicist Discusses Their Construction of the Monroe Doctrine and Their Anti-American Publications

The writer of this article, a French publicist, has just completed a trip through Siberia, and sends this discussion of Bolshevism and of Japanese methods from Yokohama.

By S. LUBARSKI-DEBALTA.

IF, instead of labeling every branch of social discipline as Bolshevism and placing it on the pedestal of a new political religion, we apply to it the test of analysis it will not be long before we find the true causes of the unrest that is shaking the world.

The same spirit of uneasiness and discontent that has brought ruin to Russia and is now disintegrating Germany and Austria is rampant in the other countries of Europe. It is the fatal but inevitable consequences of four and a half years of murderous war. Those who returned from the front seem to have brought back with them a naturally acquired inclination toward violence with an utter disregard for life but have left behind them the habits of stern discipline. They fail to find at home an adequate recognition of the sacrifices they have made. Burdened with ribbons and medals, but very lightly compensated materially, many of them find their jobs taken, employers enriched by the fruits of war and industries dismantled.

A French Major passing through Vladivostok told us of a strange feeling of joy in leaving France even for far away Siberia; for that beautiful country, which for four years was in the throes of terrible suffering, has been thrown now into a reaction of pleasure-seeking and enjoyment.

To this Major, who comes back from the front saddened by the sufferings and sacrifices he had seen, this natural reaction was revolting; the simple-minded soldier who returns home and finds an orgy of festivity, demands his place at the banquet table, and if he does not get it he becomes a "revolté" and takes it.

The same psychological phenomena repeats itself with scientific precision in every country; the conflict between those who come back and those who stayed at home. The spirit of discontent and of violence is brought right from the front, and is spread to those who, rightly or wrongly, have a grief of some sort. The war has created in every country a host of new aspirants to the throne, and Bolshevism is no more than the temporary reign of the canaille. In Russia every tchinovnik who has lost his job in the upheaval became a politician and aspires to power. The spirit of discipline that was holding straight the balance in every nation has been broken, and has put the pendulum of authority in oscillation.

Each ill has its remedy. Knowing what Bolshevism is, a cure will be found. Whether it is a claim to a share in the wealth of the capitalistic class or a thirst for political power, the germ of this disease has had its inception in the trenches; Russia was the first to be contaminated, because the Russian soldiery was the first to be disbanded.

The Japanese seem to have assigned to their expeditionary forces in Siberia a much wider and more indiscreet activity than the other allies. The Government of Tokio is practicing a Monroe Doctrine of its own on all Asiatic territory; the Japanese seem to consider themselves the natural heirs to the riches of Siberia in case there should be a succession.

An economic intimacy has established itself between the Russians and the Japanese during the war; Siberia has become Japan's best customer in these last few years, and it is not without such "interesting" reasons that a very large expeditionary force has been dispatched so willingly from the Land of the Rising Sun to the icy steppes of Siberia.

The disparity in the true aims of America and Japan, the only two countries which have sent troops in large numbers to Siberia, has brought friction between the commands. There have been a profusion of calumnious rumors spread about the spirit and the activities of the American soldiers stationed in Siberia, and, strange enough, Russians and Japanese alike have collaborated in this slanderous work; there is no difficulty in tracing the motives of the Japanese to their true source; the attitude of the Russians deserves some explanations.

To show the maliciousness of this campaign it will suffice to quote here a few lines of a fantastic report printed in the important daily Osaka Mainichi of April 19, which purports to be the result of investigations made by a certain Kubusaburo Senuma, head of the Tokio Theological School, who had been charged by the Minister of Foreign Affairs at Tokio with the duty of determining the progress of Russian-Japanese relations in Siberia.

"Beyond question," says the Osaka Mainichi, "the former anti-Japanese feeling among Russians in Siberia has changed and has become pro-Japanese. Pressure of events probably has revealed to them the good faith of Japan. But the recent destruction of the Hori detachment and the bad reputation of the United States forces furnished the motive for the change of view.

"The reason for the bad reputation attached to the American troops has its origin in various facts, but the most conspicuous one is that the American forces are made up for the most part of naturalized American Jews. These Jews, plentifully supplied with money, are corrupting the morals of the districts in which they are stationed. Of late they have been coming into the homes of Russian people, who are finding it difficult to live, and seducing the wives and girls of the household. Of course they are losing the faith and confidence of the people."

Not only are these accusations false but ridiculous. From what can be seen in Vladivostok the morals of the Russians are much more dangerous to the welfare of the American boys, than the American troops are to the virtue of the population; the only license the Russian authorities of all régimes have ever recognized in full is the freedom of vice.

That such reports should be prominently published in Japanese organs of large circulation bearing a semi-official stamp is one of those contradictions which characterise the contortionist mind of the Orientals.

WANTED: AIRMEN.

AN "Air Service Rallying Committee" of 100,000 is being formed to work for recruits to the air service.

The movement was started in April by the publication in several thousand periodicals of a request for those interested in the maintenance and expansion of the airplane and dirigible service to send names and addresses to Captain Charles J. Glidden, Air Service, who is in charge of this phase of recruiting work. A request was sent to 1,251 Secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. that each appoint a committee of ten, the members of the committee to find five persons each interested in the air service and likely to enlist.

The air service has authorization for taking on only 15,000 recruits, but the high grade of skill required for both ground and flight work in the air service makes it desirable that a large number of applications be received.

Spoiling Hun Bombs.

HOW one American prisoner in an enemy country did his part toward winning the war was disclosed by a soldier recently returned from France. Just before the armistice was signed, the soldier related, there was a heavy aerial bombardment by the Germans not far from Metz. Fortunately it had been raining, and most of the bombs sank into the mud without exploding. Some Frenchmen gathered them together for the purpose of rendering them harmless and on opening one found it quite empty except for this message:

"I'm doing my bit. Are you doing yours?"

The note was signed "An American prisoner in Germany." Apparently the prisoner had been put to work in a German munitions plant and, whenever the opportunity presented itself, had turned out harmless bombs.

WAR VOLUMES

PUBLISHED BY THE NEW YORK TIMES CO.

Volume 18 of The New York Times War History is being delivered; it brings the record up to April, 1919.

Volume 19, which will cover the months of April, May, and June, 1919, will appear in a short time; Volume 20, with cumulative indexes, the text of the Treaties, a War Gazetteer, etc., will soon follow.

The 18 volumes will be shipped at once on order.

This history differs from the ordinary history, in that, in addition to the usual narratives of events by competent historians, each volume contains the Official Records and Reports of each three months' period of the war, also important speeches, military campaign reports and other official data, usually to be found only in Government records.

But each volume also contains brilliant descriptions of the war's progress and outstanding episodes by expert correspondents of The New York Times who were present in every battle zone. These thrilling narratives are supplemented by the richest writings from the pens of the most eminent authors, publicists, and profoundest thinkers of the different nations.

Each book, moreover, contains forty-eight pages of rotogravure etchings portraying the conspicuous characters who participated in the war. There are also in each volume sixty pages of cartoons representing the choicest examples of the most eminent cartoonists.

The 20 Volumes contain 12,999 pages of reading matter, 960 pages of rotogravure, 1,200 pages of cartoons.

A distinguishing characteristic of the set is its impartiality. There is no comment, no bias. The documents of enemy countries are published with as much freedom as those of our Allies, wherever procurable.

CURING A MOUNTAIN DOUGHBOY

A KENTUCKY mountain boy was one of the patients in Debarkation Hospital No. 5, at the Grand Central Palace, before it was closed last week, its work done; and his case was one of the most difficult the physicians there had to contend with. There was nothing organically wrong with him, and according to all the rules of the medical game he should have responded promptly to the expert treatment administered. But he got no better. This toughened mountaineer, who had never funked "over there," called constantly for his mother, for all the world like a homesick small boy.

Finally, the physicians concluded that the case was beyond their therapeutic remedies, and that a visit from the mother was the only hope of curing this queer malady. But the parents were too poor to make the long journey to New York. It was a case for the Red Cross.

And the Red Cross delivered the goods. It delivered the aged mother and father, burdened with two large bundles, at the Grand Central Station; and when the bundles were opened at the young soldier's bedside there were disclosed to the astonished nurses two fried chickens and five loaves of home-made bread.

Even the doctors admit that the recovery of the patient on this diet was amazing. He is at home now, and several letters have reached the Red Cross workers from him and from his mother, warm, labored, awkward letters, telling how all the Kentucky mountainside is talking about the wonderful time they had.

18,902 Patients There.

The closing of Debarkation Hospital No. 5 was tangible evidence that the inflow of American soldiers from overseas had ceased. During the six months of its existence it had cared for 18,902 men. The large Red Cross staff at the hospital has been demobilized, and most of the workers received assignments to other Red Cross activities in this city.

Dec. 22, 1918, the newly equipped hospital received its first patients in the persons of 774 officers and men from Brest, who had arrived that day on board the Steamship Mongolia. Since that time the great wards on every floor have been kept filled with new arrivals, who passed through the debarkation hospital as quickly as arrangements could be made to have them placed in base hospitals near their home towns or in climates best fitted to hasten their recovery.

Those in charge of the hospital are particularly proud of the fact that the death rate was less than 1 per cent. of the patients received, despite the fact that many soldiers reached port in a critical condition and that the hospital went through the fag end of the influenza epidemic.

The dispatch with which patients were received and evacuated was a noteworthy achievement. The largest number of patients received in any one day was 1,328. Of this number, 1,106, arrived at one time, and it was no small accomplishment to have the men in bed in less than four hours. During that time valuables had been checked, records taken, clothing sent to the sterilizer, and every man had taken a bath and received pajamas. As many as 1,100 evacuations have been made in twenty-four hours. The commanding officer of the hospital was Colonel P. W. Gibson, and the Adjutant, Major Lewis A. Walker.

Providing amusement for these men, in various degrees of illness and convalescence, was one of the tasks of the Red Cross, and a glance at the records of the organization's work at Grand Central Palace shows the superb manner in which New York "came across" to enliven the days of the newly returned soldiers.

The Stage Women's War Relief built a complete theatre in the palace, and from its opening until the last night not an evening passed but some sort of "show" was staged there. For those men who were too ill to go to the theatre there were entertainments in the wards, usually in half a dozen wards a night, and beds from neighboring wards taken in. The device of throwing motion pictures on the ceiling for the benefit of men who could not be propped up was used successfully in many parts of the hospital.

Then there were "eats parties" galore for the men who were able to go out. Often enough the guests went on crutches. There were 16,500 dinners given to the boys by patriotic New Yorkers. At the dinner at the Commodore John Malk Bowman entertained 2,000 patients at one time.

There were certain regular amusements that the hospital could always count on. For instance, there were fifty tickets daily for the sightseeing yacht which circles New York, and, after the baseball season opened, there were fifty tickets a day for the game, besides two or three buses each day to take crowds of boys on sightseeing trips. The buses were donated chiefly by the Red Cross shop and the Knights of Columbus. Hundreds lent their autos for sightseeing tours, and the records show that 12,900 rides were thus provided.

The theatres were lavish, and 4,500 theatre tickets were distributed among the men at the hospital. The work of the Red Cross Home Service in the hospital was tremendous. Due to the uncertainty of mail in the A. E. F. many soldiers had literally "lost" their families while overseas, for the families had moved and the letters telling of their change of address were never received. So it was "up to Home Service" to find them again. The Red Cross maintained a well-stocked storeroom out of which the boys were supplied with the hundred and one things a sick or convalescent soldier might wish for. All this was free.

History in the Making; Fresh After the Fact

Current History Magazine, published by The New York Times Co., is a magazine of facts, a survey of a month's happenings in international affairs.

The contents interest a young woman or young man of intelligence as strongly as a man and woman of affairs.

It supplies facts which necessarily appear in fragmentary form in the daily papers. Its field is the world, its appeal universal. It is impartial. What it prints is derived from official declarations or documents. It is enriched with the writings of world-renowned publicists and authors.

Analysis of Germany's New Boundaries (with maps).
The Real Facts in Russia.
The Japanese-Chinese Controversy.
Both Sides on the Fiume Question.
Field Marshal Haig's Review of the War (first part).

Georgette & Crepe de Chine Blouses

900 in a Notable Sale

Values $5 to $9 at $3.95

ALL A LEADING MAKER of fine Blouses had on hand at the beginning of his fall work, the overcuts of a season. They are made of fine quality Georgette crepe and crepe de chine, in a run of the popular colors, flesh, white, sunset, beige, bisque, gray, suit shades, league blue, etc., some combining two colors.

Many models. One has a square neck panel back and front, with embroidery in a darker shade of self color each side of the front; collarless. Another has V neck, small sailor collar edged with contrasting color that matches the narrow vestee, silk embroidery matching the colors of Blouse and vestee. The third has a deep plaited frill around the neck and part way down the front, narrow panel vestee. The frill has band of white inserted with hemstitching.

Other styles are trimmed with fine tucks, hemstitching, silk embroidery, beads, color contrasts, etc. More of the better values than of the usual five-dollar grades. None sent C. O. D., none reserved for mail or telephone orders.

VARIETY OF DRY LAWS IN THE DIFFERENT STATES

Definition of "Intoxicating" the Primary Point of Divergence—Legislation of Commonwealths Not Harmonious, and Their Attitude on Enforcement of Congress's Wartime Prohibition Statute Is in Doubt

WHAT constitutes an "intoxicating" beverage?

In the prohibition fight as it faces the new Congress at Washington this issue stands out above all others—what per cent. of alcohol in a beverage is to determine "intoxicating" under the wartime prohibition measure which goes into effect July 1, and under the Federal Constitution amendment which goes into effect next year?

In measures now before the Judiciary Committee of the House the issue is made clear. Most prominent, as outlining the course of the drys, are four bills introduced in Congress by leading champions of prohibition—Senator Knute Nelson of Minnesota, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate; Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas, Senator Wesley L. Jones of Washington, and Representative Andrew J. Volstead of Minnesota. The Nelson, Jones, and Volstead bills fix the limit of alcoholic content at one-half of 1 per cent. The Sheppard bill bars "all alcoholic liquors and compounds." The Anti-Saloon League will base its fight on a limit of not more than one-half of 1 per cent., but prefers that all alcoholic beverages be included.

The wets will contend that 2¾ per cent. of alcohol is not "intoxicating."

Patchwork of State Laws.

The fight on this issue is just beginning and will go through the highest court before it is settled. Immediately beyond the clash in Congress is the question as to what attitude the States will take in framing legislation to make effective the wartime prohibition law and the Federal amendment. In answer to this the chief indication consists of the prohibition laws now in force in the various States. No two are identical, though groups are similar.

On the main issue, the definition of "intoxicating," twenty-one States have no per cent. of alcohol standard. Fifteen have adopted one-half of 1 per cent., four of these in preparation for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment. In Vermont the standard is 1 per cent.; in Montana 2 per cent., and for cider Massachusetts has a standard of 3 per cent. Rhode Island recently raised the standard from 2 to 4 per cent. Six States prohibit all alcoholic liquor used for beverage purposes.

48 Sets of Statutes.

The prohibition laws in the forty-eight States are summarized in the following paragraphs:

Under the Alabama prohibition law of 1919 intoxicating liquors include all alcoholic liquors, and it is unlawful to receive or possess prohibited liquors excepting wine in limited quantities made for domestic use. The sale of prescriptions for alcohol, which alone it is permitted to prescribe, may be made only after the physician has made personal examination and has certified to condition of patient. A copy of the prescription must be filed in the office of a Probate Judge. It is unlawful to possess any apparatus for making liquor. For persons convicted of violating the prohibition law there is a fine of $50. The penalty for illegal manufacture is from one to five years, and the Judge shall not have authority to suspend sentence. Until recently the standard in Alabama was one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol. This has been changed by law to "containing any alcohol shall be deemed an alcoholic liquor within the meaning of the term 'prohibited liquors and beverages.'"

Only the Clergy May Have It.

Arizona's law says that ale, beer, wine or any malt, vinous, or spirituous liquors, or any mixture or preparation of like nature or any "intoxicating liquors" shall not be manufactured or introduced into the State on any pretense. Any person who manufactures, sells, barters, or gives intoxicating liquor of any kind shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for not less than ten days or more than two years, and fined not less than $25 nor more than $300. It is lawful for any regularly ordained priest or clergyman to possess wine to be used for sacramental purposes.

In Arkansas violation of the prohibition law is a felony, with a penalty of one year's sentence in the penitentiary, and no court shall suspend sentence. The license to manufacture, sell, or give away any alcoholic, vinous, malt, spirituous, or fermented "liquor of any kind" is prohibited. Physicians must file with the County Clerk affidavits that they will not prescribe liquor in the treatment of disease. Banks are prohibited from taking drafts for liquor. It is not permitted to ship liquor through the State, and soliciting orders for liquor is forbidden. "Of any kind" is held to mean a beverage containing any alcohol.

California is one of the States which has no State prohibition. It has had a local option law in force since 1911. In license territory sale on Sunday is not prohibited by the State. Liquor may not be sold after 2 A. M. and until 6 A. M. Sale on credit at retail is prohibited. Sale to drunkards, Indians, and minors is prohibited.

Colorado's prohibition law has a search and seizure clause providing that an officer who from personal knowledge or reasonable information believes that liquor is kept in any place, except a private residence, in violation of the law, shall search the suspected place without the necessity of the issuance of a warrant. Pharmacists may sell liquor upon physicians' written prescriptions, on numbered forms furnished by the Secretary of State. Prescriptions are limited to four ounces of liquor. Violation of the law is a misdemeanor with a fine of not less than $100 or imprisonment for not less than thirty days for the first offense. A second offense within five years is a felony. Liquor may be imported into the State only for medicinal and sacramental purposes. There is no percentage standard of what is "intoxicating."

Three Have Not Ratified.

Connecticut, under local option, is one of the three States which have not ratified the prohibition amendment, the other two being Rhode Island and New Jersey. Ten per cent. of the voters in a town are required to bring about an election as to whether the sale of liquor be permitted. Saloons must be closed from 10 o'clock at night to 3 in the morning and on Sundays.

From local option Delaware went into the dry column in 1919. Under the law passed by the Legislature this year the definition of liquor is any beverage which contains more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume.

Following the adoption by the voters of Florida of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor, except for medical, scientific, mechanical, and sacramental purposes, the Legislature passed the law enforcement act of 1917. In Florida the alcoholic standard is a beverage containing one-half of 1 per cent. or more of alcohol for certain liquors.

Any beverage containing one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol is prohibited by Georgia's bone dry law, which became effective in May, 1919. Alcohol is permitted for medicinal purposes. It is unlawful to license substitutes or imitations of liquor—of the class of "near-beer." The Sheriff monthly procures a list from the Internal Revenue Collector of those who have United States licenses, and delivers it to the prosecutors in the counties, who may start action on their own affidavits. The anti-shipping law of 1917 makes it unlawful for any common carrier to transport intoxicating liquor into the State. A private vehicle found carrying liquor is confiscated.

Powers of the Sheriff.

Idaho is under State prohibition. The law prohibits "any intoxicating liquor or alcohol" except for scientific or mechanical purposes. A pharmacist must have a permit from the Probate Court to transport alcohol. A search and seizure act empowers the Sheriff to search without warrant.

Illinois is one of the States without State wide prohibition, and a petition signed by one-fourth of the voters is required to bring up the question of local option for a vote. Sale on Sunday and within one mile of voting places on election day is forbidden. Intoxicating liquor is defined as that containing one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol, under the code recently adopted for the enforcement of the Eighteenth Federal Amendment.

Indiana's prohibition law became effective in April, 1918. The definition of liquor is a beverage containing as much as one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol, and all distilled malt and vinous liquors are prohibited. Manufacture for domestic use is not prohibited, such as wine or cider, nor shall the law be construed to forbid a person giving intoxicating liquor to a guest in his own home which is not a place of public resort. It is against the law to ship liquor, in unbroken packages, in continuous transit through the State. The penalty is a fine of not less than $50 or not less than ten days in the county jail. For repeated offenses the penalty is higher.

Iowa's Regulations.

In Iowa intoxicating liquors may be dispensed for pharmaceutical, medical, and sacramental purposes. The penalty for violation is a fine of not more than $200. Strict account of purchase and sales must be kept. Any person found in a state of intoxication is guilty of a misdemeanor. If a person is responsible for the intoxication of another person he must pay $1 a day for the care of this person until he has recovered from any effects of the intoxication. Drinking on passenger cars is prohibited. There is no percentage standard of what is intoxicating.

Kansas was one of the first dry States. Wine may be used for communion purposes and alcohol for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes. There is no percentage standard of what is intoxicating, but all distilled malt and vinous liquors are prohibited.

Kentucky is under local option, and in order to invoke the law for an election test 25 per cent. of the voters in a given district must sign a petition. Any beverage, liquid mixture or decoction upon which the United States does not require the payment of the special tax on retail liquor dealers is exempt. Distillers are permitted to operate in dry territory provided they make no deliveries therein. Keeping open on Sunday is prohibited. The local option law says "no intoxicating liquors."

Louisiana Local Option.

Louisiana is without State wide prohibition, but under a local option law and dry in part. It has no percentage of alcohol standard for determining what is "intoxicating," and prohibits distilled malt and vinous liquors.

Maine is another pioneer State in prohibition law. Under the act of 1919 the manufacture and sale of all liquors "as defined as intoxicating by the Federal Government" are prohibited. Automobiles, trucks, boats, not common carriers, found carrying liquor for illegal sale are forfeited. Sale of adulterated candy and brandy drops is forbidden.

Maryland has a county option law. Seven Eastern Shore counties have an anti-shipping law. The closing hour is 12 P. M., and sale is prohibited on Sundays. Carroll and Garrett Counties have anti-shipping laws, but one quart per month may be carried by one person into Carroll County, and one gallon per month into Garrett. "Intoxicating" is not defined by per cent.

Local option rules in Massachusetts. In cities and towns which authorize the granting of licenses the number of places licensed shall not exceed one for each 1,000 population. Farmers in dry territory may sell cider not to be drunk on the premises, if the cider does not contain more than "3 per cent. of alcohol." The maximum alcoholic content for other beverages is one-half of 1 per cent. Closing is required at 11 o'clock at night. Innkeepers may sell on Sundays.

Michigan's prohibition law defines intoxicating liquor as a beverage which contains "any alcohol" whether medicated or not. The provisions of the act may not be construed to prevent the manufacture of nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices or the use of intoxicating liquor for medicinal, scientific and sacramental purposes.

Status of Minnesota.

Minnesota is under local option law. The State has passed a law enforcement code for the Eighteenth Amendment providing that intoxicating liquor shall be any mixture used as beverage which contains as much as one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol.

Mississippi's dry law does not prohibit the making of homemade wine for domestic or household use. All prescriptions for the sale of liquor must be covered in monthly reports by the physician. There are the usual anti-shipping and advertising laws. There is no percentage standard of what is intoxicating.

Missouri has adopted a law enforcement code with a definition of one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol, and that further definition by Congress shall be binding to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment. Under existing law Missouri is wet.

In Montana's prohibition law intoxicating liquor is defined as "any whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, malt, or any spirituous, vinous, fermented liquors" which contain as much as 3 per cent. of alcohol. For violation the minimum punishment is a fine of $10 or not more than six months' imprisonment. It is unlawful to carry or deliver liquor.

Private Stocks in Nebraska.

Nebraska forbids the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor, but a person may keep in his dwelling house an amount of liquor not more than is sufficient for his personal use and needs. Any liquor consigned must contain on the package "Intoxicating Liquors." For the first offense the penalty is a fine of $100 or imprisonment for not less than thirty days. Wherever a married woman, minor, or other person can prove that an injury has been suffered because of failure to enforce the law, the county or city is liable for damages.

Nevada has been under State wide prohibition since December, 1918. The wets are contending for another referendum on the ground that the soldiers were away and did not have an opportunity to express their will. There is no percentage definition of "intoxicating."

In New Hampshire intoxicating liquor may be sold only on prescription and for sacramental use. Alcohol may be sold for mechanical or scientific purposes. State and town agents are appointed to have charge of liquor according to these provisions. All liquor sold must be "pure, and of sufficient age and have been tested by an assayer." The standard is one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol.

New Jersey is under a municipal option law which defines "municipality" as including cities, villages, and townships. Intoxicating liquor is defined as "any spirituous, vinous, malt, brewed or any other intoxicating liquor by whatever name the same shall be known." In order to bring about a vote a 15 per cent. initiative is required. The law went into effect in 1918.

New Mexico is dry by constitutional amendment, adopted in 1918. The definition of intoxicating liquor is "any kind containing alcohol." For the first offense $50 fine or thirty days in jail is the penalty.

Situation in New York.

New York is under local option. In towns the question is submitted biennially; in cities annually, by special election on petition. Liquors under the law are described as "all distilled or rectified spirits, wine, fermented and malt liquors." The New York brewers contend that beer containing not more than 2.75 per cent. of alcohol is not a violation of the wartime prohibition law which goes into effect July 1 and have obtained a preliminary injunction against stoppage of manufacture by the Federal authorities. It is the intention to carry the case through to the Supreme Court as a test case for the country.

In addition to a prohibition law North Carolina has a near-beer law against the manufacture or sale of any mixture which shall contain "alcohol, or cocaine or morphine, or other opium derivative," but this shall not be construed to prevent the use of these for medical purposes. The sale of cider is any quantity by the manufacturer, from fruits grown in the State, is permitted.

North Dakota limits the sale of intoxicating liquor to medicinal, mechanical, scientific, and sacramental purposes. Liquor under the law is described as "any mixture that will produce any degree of intoxication whatsoever." For the first offense the fine is not less than $200 or ninety days in jail.

Ohio is dry by constitutional amendment, passed at the last election. An enforcement code fixes the standard of all alcoholic beverages. The wets have taken the fight to a referendum.

Oklahoma is dry. Intoxicating liquor may be sold only for medicinal and scientific purposes. The definition is any beverage containing as much as one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol.

Oregon's prohibition law makes anything containing in excess of one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol intoxicating. The making of nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices is permissible. It is unlawful for any person to be found in a state of intoxication in any public place. A fine of not less than $10 is the penalty.

Pennsylvania's License System.

Pennsylvania has a license system. Residents of a ward, borough or township may petition the Court of General Sessions against the issuance of a license, which the court will pass upon. There is Sunday closing.

Rhode Island has a local option law. The question is voted upon at each regular election. The manufacture of liquor may be maintained in dry territory, provided no sales to those living therein are made. Anything that contains more than ½ per cent. of alcohol is held intoxicating.

In South Carolina the prohibition law defines intoxicating liquor as any beverage "which if drunk in excess will produce intoxication." The penalty is a fine of not less than $100 or imprisonment for not less than three months. No more than one-half pint of alcohol may be sold on any one physician's prescription, issued only after examination.

South Dakota is one of the States that has prohibition by constitutional amendment. Intoxicating liquor is described as any "compound containing alcohol and which mixture or compound is capable of being used as a beverage." Hard cider is specifically included in the prohibited list. The minimum fine for violation of the law is $200.

Tennessee passed a bone dry law in 1917. The definition is "intoxicating liquors, including all vinous, spirituous, or malt liquors." No druggist may have in his possession at any one time alcohol or wine or both combined greater in amount than 1 per cent. of his stock. Tennessee's anti-shipping law, however, fixes the standard at one-half of 1 per cent.

Texas recently adopted prohibition by constitutional amendment, but the code has not yet been adopted to make it effective. Before that Texas was under State wide prohibition. No definite standard as to alcoholic content is fixed.

Permits for Cider.

Utah's dry law makes intoxicating liquor mean any beverage containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol. Before cider or vinegar may be manufactured a permit must be obtained from the Attorney General. For the first offense the penalty is a $50 fine or not less than thirty days in jail.

Vermont has a local option law. The warning of each annual town meeting shall contain the question: "Shall license be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquor in this town?" Intoxicating liquor is described as any beverage which contains more than 1 per cent. of alcohol.

The dry law of Virginia draws the limit on all beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol. The provisions of the act shall not prevent any person from manufacturing for his domestic consumption wine or cider and nonintoxicating cider, "containing not more than 1 per cent. of alcohol by volume for use or sale." Any person found intoxicated must disclose from whom he received the liquor or be guilty of a misdemeanor. The act shall not prohibit any person from traveling from without the State or from within the State from one point to another with one quart of ardent spirits for the bona fide use of himself or family.

Washington's prohibition law describes intoxicating liquor as "any beverage which contains alcohol." Manufacture and sale are prohibited except for medicinal, scientific, mechanical, or sacramental purposes, but it is not unlawful for a person to give away intoxicating liquor on his premises, "to a guest in his private dwelling or apartment."

Home-made Wine Allowed.

In West Virginia the dry law does not prevent any one from manufacturing for his domestic consumption wine or cider, or nonintoxicating cider or other fruit juice for sale. In any period of thirty days a person may not carry into the State or within the State more than one quart of liquor for his personal use. One-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol is the standard of an intoxicating beverage in West Virginia.

Wisconsin is under local option. The sale of "near beer" is illegal in dry territory. There is Sunday closing.

Wyoming has just adopted a law enforcement code for the Eighteenth Amendment fixing the limit of alcohol in a beverage at one-half of 1 per cent. A constitutional amendment recently adopted prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor after January, 1920. In the meantime Wyoming is wet.

The District of Columbia prohibition act defines intoxicating liquor as follows: "Wherever the term 'alcoholic liquor' is used in this act it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, rum, gin, wine, ale, porter, cordials, hard or fermented cider, alcoholic bitters, ethyl alcohol, all malt liquors, and all other alcoholic liquors."

"Whenever the term 'liquor,' 'intoxicating liquor,' or 'intoxicating liquors' is used in this act, it shall be deemed to include whisky, brandy, rum, wine, ale, porter, beer, cordials, hard or fermented cider, alcoholic bitters, ethyl alcohol, and all malt liquors, including all alcoholic compounds classed by the United States Internal Revenue Bureau as 'compound liquors.' Provided that this act shall not apply to ethyl or wood alcohol."

Thus the new Federal prohibition measures are superimposed upon a hodgepodge of State laws of various dates and conflicting intent and obviously reflecting widely differing local sentiment.

AFTER JULY 1—THE GREAT AMERICAN DESERT.

HOW THE STATES STAND.

States dry by Statewide prohibition legislation—Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, Washington.

States in part wet, that is, under local option and without Statewide prohibition laws—California, Connecticut, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, Wisconsin.

Dry States which have fixed one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol as the standard of an "intoxicating beverage"—Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Oklahoma, Oregon, Minnesota, Missouri, Tennessee, New Hampshire, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Wyoming. Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, and Wyoming have taken this action in preparation for the Eighteenth Federal Amendment, and Maine has passed a law that its standard shall comply with what is adopted by the Federal amendment.

State which has fixed a standard of 4 per cent. of alcohol—Rhode Island, by a recent act.

State which has fixed 3 per cent. of alcohol as the standard—Massachusetts in the case of cider at wholesale under certain conditions.

State which has fixed 2 per cent. of alcohol as the standard—Montana prohibits all distilled malt and vinous liquors and fixes a standard of 2 per cent. for "liquor or liquid of any kind or description * * * which contains as much as 2 per cent. of alcohol."

States which have fixed 1 per cent. of alcohol as the standard—Vermont; Massachusetts, except for cider.

States which have not defined "intoxicating" on the basis of percentage of alcoholic content, but prohibit all distilled malt and vinous liquors—Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Texas, Wisconsin.

Dry States which have laws prohibiting all "alcoholic" liquors for beverage purposes—Alabama, Arkansas, Michigan, New Mexico, South Dakota, Washington, Ohio. [Wets have called for referendum on action of Ohio Legislature.]

NEWS OF THE SUMMER SHOWS—MOTION PICTURES

WHAT NEWS ON THE RIALTO?

THERE is in process of consideration at the present moment—if not in actual formation—an alliance of playwrights which would have no small effect upon the stage as it is at present constituted. Briefly, the suggestion has been made that some ten of the most prolific and successful writers for the American stage—among them Eugene Walter, Roi Cooper Megrue, Max Marcin, Samuel Shipman, and Rachel Crothers—should combine for the formation of a producing organization.

The organization thus formed would have first call upon the plays of the authors thus allied, and the author, in addition to his royalty, would receive 25 per cent. of the profits. The organization, if it is undertaken, will be financed by a well-known motion-picture man, who will agree to buy for the films all of the plays thus produced, the author again to receive a royalty and an interest.

It is said, in fact, that it is largely the big money in motion-picture rights which has brought about the step toward organization. Under existing contracts the film rights to plays are sold by the managers, with the approval of the authors, and the latter have been known to claim that the producers do not always obtain as high a figure as they might. The picture rights to almost any successful play are worth between $25,000 and $50,000 these days, and are becoming an increasingly important item.

Probably one of the results of such a combination would be a more general opening up of the playwriting field to the new writer, but it is as yet too early to speculate. In seeking rules whereby to guide themselves the Society of Ten has come upon innumerable difficulties, and it is far from certain that the obstacles can be overcome.

Raymond Hitchcock returned from London a week ago—in time to take fleeting part in the gambol of the Lambs at the Hippodrome—and plunged immediately into the work of getting up a 1919 edition of "Hitchy-Koo." George V. Hobart is already busily turning out the book, (sic,) and the entertainment, according to present plans, will be produced here in August. By that time there probably will be at least five musical productions in town bearing the serial number 1919, which means that all five will publish 1920 editions a year from now. Mr. Ziegfeld's "Follies" and the Winter Garden's "Passing Show," of course, are standard and hardy annuals; George White, coming forward with "Scandals of 1919," gives indirect promise of another show a year hence; the Shuberts are preparing "Gaieties of 1919," and promise future numbers, and Mr. Hitchcock's entertainment will round out the quintet. And, these being times when almost any musical comedy can score a box office success, the number of annuals may grow to seven or eight before another Summer rolls around.

Al Jolson brought his season in "Sinbad" to an end in Boston last night, following a run of ten weeks at the Boston Opera House—an auditorium so huge that four weeks were regarded, in the beginning, as a highly desirable run. Jolson, in the last few seasons, has come into Fred Stone's class as an individual drawing card; his name, regardless of the attraction, is sufficient to pack theatres in almost any city in the country. He will reopen with "Sinbad" in Philadelphia in the Fall, and New York is not likely to see him again for at least two seasons.

William A. Brady is back from London and Paris with no plays, but some news of the films and the further information that Gilbert Miller, son of Henry Miller, already has become one of the foremost English producers, and promises to go higher. It is Miller who produced the operatic version of "Monsieur Beaucaire."

As for Paris, Mr. Brady is quoted as follows:

"There has been a striking change in the French theatre. With the abolishment of the promenade and those who used it as a rendezvous in the Paris playhouse there has come a change in the entire atmosphere. The French have improved their staging, and now have magnificent productions, with original instead of American or English music. And an orchestra seat costs $4. One of the best musical plays I ever saw in Paris is 'Aladdin,' produced at the Folies Marigny. The two big successes in Paris are 'Couche de la Mariée,' and 'The President of the Palaces,' both of which have been bought for America by Gilbert Miller."

Ernest Lawford, who, since the death of Nat Goodwin has been playing the rôle of the uncle in "Why Marry?" on tour, will return to New York in August as one of the principal players in Mr. Woods's production of Somerset Maugham's play, "Too Many Husbands," coming to the Hudson. Mr. Maugham probably will be doubly represented in these parts, incidentally, for Mr. Dillingham has acquired the American rights to his latest play, (and in London one of his most successful,) "Caesar's Wife." It is now running at the London Royalty.

Contrary to the Woodsonian announcement, Sam Barnard will not return to the cast of "Friendly Enemies" in the Fall. He has sold his interest in the play to Mr. Woods, and will seek pastures new when the next season rolls around. As for his willingness to leave the prosperous "Friendly Enemies" behind him there is no lack of rumors regarding the impact which results when star meets star.

Charles Emerson Cook added a fourth to his next season prospects during the last week, and bids fair to establish himself as a manager before the end of another season. As his newest contribution he has acquired a farce by Martin Brown, who wrote "A Very Good Young Man," entitled "An Innocent Idea," and will place Robert Emmett Keane and John Westley in the leading rôles. Mr. Cook's earlier trio of prospective enterprises comprise plays in which Emma Dunn, Florence Nash, and Lou Tellegen will be the stars.

The search of the Messrs. Smith and Golden for a player to act the Bacon rôle in "Lightnin'" seems to have come to an end with the discovery that Will M. Cressy, well known in the varieties, is more or less the type and a good enough actor. Cressy, as every follower of vaudville knows, has been playing a series of sketches of his own authorship for years, and has established himself solidly with the two-a-day populace. The present indications are that "Lightnin'" can run far into the new season at the Gaiety, and since certain prosperity awaits it in the provinces the organization of a second—and perhaps a third—company has become obligatory.

One by one the farces of yesteryear are succumbing to the musical comedy craze. The latest to fall under the hammer is "Never Say Die," which William Collier played some seven or eight seasons ago. It will blossom forth next season as an Arthur Hammerstein production.

Even the films, for that matter, are being combed for musical comedy material. A year of more ago Marguerite Clark appeared in a picture called "Miss George Washington," and it is from "Miss George Washington" that "The Little Whopper" is now being fashioned. The Messrs. Harbach and Friml are doing the fashioning, and New York is scheduled to see the product some time in October.

There seems finally to be some hope that the vacancy adjoining the Selwyn Theatre, in Forty-second Street, will, indeed, accommodate its two announced theatres before the new season is more than half completed. Gone, long gone, is the plan to name them after the Misses Illington and Mayo; they will bear instead the far more prosaic names of the Times Square and the Forty-second Street. They will be under the direction of the Selwyns, who hope that they will seat, respectively and nightly, 1,200 and 1,100 persons.

The Grace and Charm of Miss Miller Are Something More Than Contributing Factors to the Success of the Most Important of the Year's Musical Shows, "The Ziegfeld Follies of 1919." Marilynn Miller Is the Spirit of the "Follies."

MINUTE VISITS IN THE WINGS

WITH the entrance of Eleanor Dawn into the cast of "Up in Mabel's Room," last Monday night, the Dawns of Amityville were theatrically represented by no less than four members of the family—thereby tying the record of the Dooleys.

Of these, Eleanor, the newest, is also the youngest, being still in her teens. Moreover, she has leaped from the seclusion of Amityville to the dazzle of a Broadway engagement without any preliminary training, albeit her rôle in "Up in Mabel's Room" is but a small one.

Of the four Dawn sisters now before the public, the best known to the populace is, of course, Hazel Dawn, whose rôle is the leading one in that same "Up in Mabel's Room." Hazel Dawn has now come into prominence in three branches of the amusement world—musical comedy, ("The Pink Lady," in particular,) motion pictures, and farce.

The second of the quartet is Margaret, who adopted for stage purposes the name of Romaine, and has become well-known thereunder. Her field is musical comedy and operetta. The fourth sister, Nannie, was an opera singer in Italy when America entered the war, and was decorated for her Red Cross work.

There is a fifth sister, living in England, who is not on the stage, and also a non-acting brother, a student of engineering.

THE real name of La Sylphe, who won the major share of attention at the opening of "The Scandals of 1919," is Edythe Lambelle. She has been dancing since the age of 6, but since she has appeared largely in foreign countries, she has remained comparatively unknown in New York. She was the first of all dancers to dance the once celebrated "Salome" dance, although she never received credit therefor—if "credit" is the word—in New York.

Miss Lambelle, American born, was taken abroad by her mother at the age of 6, (the laws of this country prohibited her stage appearance here at that age.) For eight years she traveled and studied, in that time circling the globe twice. She spent most of her time in London, Brussels, Paris, and Milan, and managed, in addition to such instruction in dancing as she acquired, to pick up five languages.

Then, returning to the United States, she made her début in her native country at the age of 14, dancing first on the Pacific Coast. It was here that she danced "The Vision of Salome" for the first time in this country. Before she could show it in New York, however, it had been exhibited here by divers other dancers.

Her second journey abroad took her again twice around the world, and saw her as premiere danseuse at the Alhambra in London—one of the highest-paid positions in the dancing world. A little later she was for two seasons at the Folies Bergere in Paris.

Her press clippings are in no less than eight languages, which is perhaps sufficient testimony to the presence of the wanderlust.

VIOLETTE WILSON, who plays the daughter to Lew Fields in "A Lonely Romeo," is an actress, author, director, producer, and dance exponent. During her college days at the University of California, in Berkeley, which is her home town, she began writing what she chooses to term "dance dramas," or combination plays involving the different elements of the drama, i. e., dancing, singing, comedy, and tragedy.

Having the means to back up her ideas, Miss Wilson produced one of her dance-dramas in a large amphitheatre near Berkeley. Through this performance she was brought to the attention of producers and soon afterward played one of her sketches in vaudeville. A little later she joined Richard Ordynski at the Little Theatre in Los Angeles.

With Ordynski she appeared in Zoe Akins's comedy, "Papa," which was recently staged here with indifferent results. She played also in "Nju," and when this piece was done at the Bandbox Theatre in New York, a few years ago, Miss Wilson came from Los Angeles to play her original rôle.

Then, when "Caliban" was produced at the Harvard Stadium in Boston, a few Summers ago, Miss Wilson played the rôles of Juliet and Nicvella. After "Caliban" she returned to Berkeley and the staging of dance-dramas. More recently she played at the Little Theatre in St. Louis and at the Arts and Crafts Theatre in Detroit, where several of her own plays were presented. "A Lonely Romeo" is her first venture into musical comedy.

THERE sings on the Century Roof these nights—these midnights, rather—one Susanne Caubet. Miss Caubet is French, and is a god-daughter and a protégé of Sarah Bernhardt, under whose watchful care she was raised and came by her knowledge of the theatre.

Miss Caubet is a daughter of Louis Caubet, a French actor, who appeared with Mme. Bernhardt for nearly thirty years. She made her stage début at the age of three as a member of Bernhardt's company, being cast for the rôle of the prince thrown into the tigers' den in "Gismonda." At the age of ten she was virtually adopted by Mme. Bernhardt, and was her almost constant companion from that time until a few months ago.

The young actress made three trips to America with Bernhardt, on the last occasion playing opposite the great actress as Therese in "L'Aiglon." Last Winter, when it became evident that Mme. Bernhardt had virtually retired from the stage, Miss Caubet made her début as a singer at the Théâtre des Varieties in Paris. It was there that Morris Gest saw her, early in the Spring, and induced her to return to America. She made her first appearance on the Century Roof three weeks ago.

IN THE NEWS NET.

LAST week was marked by a number of announcements of screen contracts involving, in some cases, changes of affiliation by well-known players.

Among the first received was to the effect that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had engaged Lionel Barrymore to appear in a screen version of Augustus Thomas's "The Copperhead," playing, of course, the part of Milt Shanks, which he made famous on the stage last year. Work on the production will be begun in the East in September.

Another announcement of unusual interest was that Elsie Janis, just returned from especially active service at the front and elsewhere in France, would appear in pictures for the Selznick Pictures Corporation. Miss Janis is expected to play in two productions before she goes to Paris in September for a stage engagement.

Another player added to the Selznick group is Owen Moore, who takes on the burdens and benefits of a star under the terms of his new contract.

Martha Mansfield, Eva Fontaine, and Yvonne Shelton, all former Ziegfeld girls, have been cast for parts in Selznick pictures.

Mildred Harris Chaplin, as the former Miss Harris, who married Charlie Chaplin, will now be known, has left Universal and signed a contract with Louis B. Mayer, who, it will be remembered, became Anita Stewart's manager after legal difficulties with Vitagraph had been settled.

Pearl White, who has been prominent in Pathé serials for some time, is to appear in photoplays as a Fox star, it is announced.

Mary Miles Minter has left the American Film Company to star for the recently organized Realart Pictures Corporation, of which Arthur S. Kane is the President.

Lionel Atwill of various stage and screen connections has been engaged to support Florence Reed in her fourth production for United Picture Theatres, Inc.

Murdock MacQuarrie, who has worked for the screen as both an actor and a director, will assist Frank Lloyd in the direction of the forthcoming Geraldine Farrar productions, the first of which has part of its action in Petrograd.

Joseph Franklin Poland, the author of many photoplays, has signed a contract to write for Universal exclusively.

The Capitol Theatre, at Broadway and Fifty-first Street, about which there has been more or less speculation, will be opened in the Fall with Douglas Fairbanks's first picture to be made for the United Artists' Corporation. It is announced. Accompanying this news is the report that Joseph Henabery, who appeared as Lincoln in "The Birth of a Nation," assisted D. W. Griffith in the production of "Intolerance," and directed Fairbanks in "The Man from Painted Post," "Say Young Fellow," and "Swat the Kaiser," has again taken charge of the Fairbanks forces. He was recently discharged from the army as a Corporal.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation seems to be looking for new worlds to conquer. Following the report last week that the corporation, having acquired at least a sphere of influence in the Rialto-Rivoli territory, had extended its domain to include the chain of B. S. Moss theatres, came the announcement that it would distribute the Post travel and scenic pictures, had re-engaged Maurice Tourneur to direct Paramount-Artcraft productions, and had organized an Educational and Industrial Department. The Post pictures, which have been shown from time to time at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, are principally associated with the names of Clyde E. Elliott and W. A. Van Scoy. In the future they will be known as Paramount-Post pictures, and released every other week, beginning Sept. 1.

Maurice Tourneur made "The Bluebird" and other notable photoplays for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and then produced "Sporting Life," "Woman," and "The White Heather" independently.

Nathan H. Friend, formerly general manager of the Paramount-Bray Pictographs, has organized the Educational and Industrial Department, the purpose of which is to make pictures for exhibition in schools.

Mr. Moss will remain as the executive head of the theatres identified with his name. He issued a statement last week in which he said that the Broadway and other houses under his control had been "merged with the other theatrical interests of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation," but that they would "be operated as an independent organization, not alone playing the Famous Players-Lasky pictures, but also any other pictures of merit." They will continue to be known as the B. S. Moss theatres.

The Board of Directors and the Review Committee of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures held their Summer conference last Tuesday. Various reports were read. The first showed that the board's weekly bulletin had increased its circulation, and now reached interested centres in the principal cities of thirty-eight States. Warren M. Covill, Secretary of the social service department, reported that the number of inquiries about pictures suitable for churches, schools, community centres, recreational work, &c., was evidence of a wide extension of the service of his department. Wilton Barrett, Review Secretary, narrated the history of the censorship fight and urged those present to continue their opposition to the establishment of official film censors. The work of the board and of the National Committee for Better Films was dealt with in general and in particular by Orrin G. Cocks.

Mack Sennett's "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," Bothwell Browne, who is featured in the production as a dancer, and a company of Mr. Sennett's bathing girls will come to the Broadway Theatre next Sunday. In the company will be Alice Maison, Mickey Marvis, Elsie B. Ware, Jane Allen, Irene Wiley, Molly McGowan, and Dorothy Haver.

The Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, which is larger than the Strand on Broadway, is nearing completion and will be opened early in September.

The educational, travel, and scenic film folk seem to be active.

Prizma reports that Dr. Leonard S. Sugden, whose Alaskan pictures were at the Rialto, has left Cody, Wyo., for a trip into the Rockies, where he hopes to get some camera shots at big game. Later he will make pictures of seal fishing on the Pribilof Islands, reindeer farming, Eskimo sports, and whatever else he comes across that appeals to him.

Burton Holmes has gone to Europe to make pictures intended to show the extent and character of the devastation in England, France, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, and Poland, and what is being done in reconstruction work. He expects to come back in four months with 60,000 feet of film to be cut and released as Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues under the general title of "Europe in the Remaking."

The spruce forests of the Northwest are the subject of "War Spruce," and "Sundown" is the title of the next Robert C. Bruce scenic, both from Educational Films Corporation.

This week's issue of the Ford Educational Weekly is called "Pure Havana," and deals with various aspects of life and scenery in Cuba.

Raymond Agnel, a former Outing-Chester cameraman, has cabled that he has been released from the French Army and will soon return to his work. "Getting the Cassiar's Goat" is the title of an Outing-Chester picture of hunting in the Hudson Bay region soon to be released.

A new trick in double-exposure photography by which one person is able to appear as two characters in a single scene without any dividing line or other indication of mechanical contrivance has been used in Select's "His Bridal Night," with Alice Brady in the leading rôle, according to report.

Notice of the recent death of Betty Gray from influenza was received last week. Miss Gray, whose name off the screen and stage was Lily Pedersen, was a native of Passaic, N. J., where she was born in February, 1896. She was a model for Harrison Fisher's "Western Girl" series and for Charles Dana Gibson's "Débutante" pictures. After a period in vaudeville, she went to the screen, and was featured by Pathé, Vitagraph, and Universal. She was preparing to begin an engagement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation when she died, it is said. During the war she was active in Government work.

A committee of G. A. R. officials was invited to a private showing of "Secret Service," the Paramount-Artcraft Special which comes to the Rivoli today, and is reported to have declared the civil war costumes and atmosphere of the photoplay to be correct.

The picture rights to three of Bret Harte's stories have been purchased by Jesse D. Hampton, whose productions are released by Robertson-Cole through Exhibitors Mutual. They are "Cressy," "In a Hollow of the Hills," and "Maruja."

Another Bret Harte story, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," has been made into a photoplay by Universal, with Harry Carey in the leading rôle.

Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, announces that he has obtained "Sahara," with Louise Glaum, and "Human Desire," with Anita Stewart, for early exhibition.

HOW THE "FOLLIES" ARE WRITTEN

SOMETHING of the excisions, additions, and substitutions to which musical comedy is subject in the making has become familiar through constant repetition. Probably no present-day musical entertainment passes through the processes of manufacture and production without undergoing change after change, but the modern musical revue, by reason of the elasticity induced by lack of plot, is rendered particularly susceptible to the changing winds. And none more so than the Ziegfeld "Follies."

No other entertainment in the world is put together in quite the way that is the "Follies." "Put together" is used advisedly, for the "Follies" is built rather than written. It is assembled, practically in its entirety, in the three weeks that precede the opening at Atlantic City; not infrequently it is still being radically rewritten two or three days before the New York opening. Florenz Ziegfeld generally lets the month of April go by without making any definite plans, even though the chorus is already rehearsing isolated numbers, and then proceeds to compose an entertainment of unparelleled magnitude in the few weeks which follow.

Rennold Wolf, who has collaborated on three of the last five "Follies," and has had as good an opportunity as any one to observe the process, declares that the "Follies" is 90 per cent. Ziegfeld, despite the army of helpers who assist with its composition. With due allowance for author's modesty, Mr. Ziegfeld undoubtedly contributes in greatest degree to the success of the "Follies." His is the eye which selects the chorus—a potent factor in "Follies" success—and it is he who is almost exclusively responsible for the costumes.

He concerns himself also, but less effectively, with the numbers and the comedy scenes, and to the author who is unacquainted with his ways he is likely to be a constant source of exasperation. In April of the present year while at Palm Beach he kept a constant flow of telegrams on the wire to Wolf, instructing him to write certain numbers and scenes. Wolf, in the writing of his first "Follies," in 1915, had been through much the same thing, except that on the earlier occasion he had been less familiar with the modus operandi, and had, accordingly, painstakingly written all of the scenes which Mr. Ziegfeld believed he wanted.

Some idea of what an author goes through while writing the "Follies" is contained in the fact that Wolf and Channing Pollock, authors of the 1915 show, were not engaged until three weeks and two days prior to the opening of the show at Atlantic City. The principals began rehearsing two days after the authors began to write.

On one occasion, during the writing of the 1915 edition, Wolf was called out of bed at 7 o'clock in the morning, and instructed to come immediately to Ziegfeld's hotel, bringing with him all the material which he had prepared. Wolf had written seven comedy scenes, all to Ziegfeld's order, and with these in hand and neatly typed he made for the manager's hotel. When he handed them to Mr. Ziegfeld the latter weighed them in his hand and remarked: "That's more than I've had in all the other 'Follies' put together." The scenes were never even read, far less played in "The Follies." Incidentally, the overflow of the 1915 show alone later made two London revues, having been sold by Wolf to Albert de Courville.

Mr. Ziegfeld's preparation for each successive edition of "The Follies" consists largely in a careful reading through the year of various foreign periodicals. From these he clips hundreds of dress designs and cartoons in which ideas seem to lurk. When Spring arrives both designs and cartoons generally are behind the times, but from them he gets perhaps a few costumes and a single comedy idea or number. These form the basis of the new "Follies."

"The Follies," of course, is largely tailored to its cast, and it is in large measure the uncertainty as to principals which keeps the authors in the air until the final minute. In 1915 the principal rôle was to have been Annette Kellermann's, and the show was practically written around Miss Kellermann. It opened with a Psyche-at-the-pond scene, and it included a Roman bath number and divers other episodes designed to exhibit Miss Kellermann at her best. A week before the Atlantic City opening, however, Miss Kellermann decided that her opportunities in the entertainment were insufficient and walked out.

Ina Claire was engaged in her place, and, obviously, none of the scenes designed for Miss Kellermann would do for Miss Claire. The pond scene was elided, the Roman bath became a Turkish harem, and so on. Three days before the Atlantic City opening Mr. Ziegfeld came frantically to the authors, who were Wolf and Pollock, and begged them to write a good song for Miss Claire. The two talked it over on the way to lunch, and in looking for a demure character Wolf hit upon the "Marie-Odile" idea. The song was written that afternoon; at dinner time Pollock telephoned Wolf that he had reread it and meant to destroy it; Wolf also thought it was below par, but advised him to wait before tearing it up. By morning both were enthusiastic about it, and it went into the show with the result well-known—it was the most discussed bit of that particular "Follies," and led directly to Miss Claire's signing with David Belasco.

Something of the same sort happened with Eddie Cantor's aviation scene last year. Wolf and Cantor had worked on it together and were enthusiastic about its possibilities; but for some reason it was simply not put into the show. Half the week passed at Atlantic City, with Mr. Ziegfeld promising nightly that he would try the scene the next night. Finally, to force the issue, Cantor's vaudeville agent, Max Hart, was persuaded to go to Mr. Ziegfeld and to inform him that Cantor was dissatisfied with his material and that he intended leaving the show. He had mentioned something about an aviation scene—did Mr. Ziegfeld know anything about it? The aviation scene was tried at the Friday night performance, and from a comedy standpoint was the hit of the piece.

Good scenes and good numbers being as rare as they are, it is perhaps unbelievable that the producer of the "Follies" let seven of Rennold Wolf's songs remain unopened and unsung in 1915. Bert Williams, whom nearly every writing man in the country has tried to fit with songs, was in need of numbers; Wolf wrote seven, and it was characteristic of both Ziegfeld and Williams that they were never even read. A year later, the emergency being frantic, Mr. Ziegfeld came to Wolf a day before the Atlantic City opening and asked him to have a song for Williams by the following morning. Wolf, who was not writing the "Follies" that year, dug up the best of the old ones, and Ziegfeld paid $500 for a number which he could have had for nothing the year before. It was "I Ain't Married No Moah," a big Williams success.

Williams is the most difficult man in "The Follies" to write for. The scene which Wolf declares is the funniest he ever wrote—intended for Williams and built around sudden death and tombstones—was never rehearsed this year, due solely to the superstition of Williams.

One of Mr. Ziegfeld's telegrams to Wolf from Palm Beach in April of this year instructed the author to write a burlesque of "The Jest," and to have it ready when he returned from Florida. Wolf, who had not seen the play, purchased seats with considerable difficulty, and attended a performance. He did not believe that an effective burlesque could be written, however, and informed Mr. Ziegfeld upon his return. By that time the entire matter had slipped from the producer's mind; he himself had not seen "The Jest" and knew nothing about it, and had sent the wire to Wolf upon the casual suggestion of an acquaintance.

The Salvation Army finale of the present entertainment was used for the first time last Monday night, on the occasion of the New York opening. As for such minor changes as transpositions of scenes, they are legion. During the week at Atlantic City this year the order of scenes was changed some six or seven times, and the sequence on Monday night was still a new one. On several occasions in "Follies" history the first and second acts have been reversed at the final moment.

THE WEEK'S EVENTS

ONE more Summer revue will make its bid for favor this week, thereby doing its share to keep the season alive. There remain no less than twenty-seven attractions in the playhouses—an unheard of number for the season of the year.

GREENWICH VILLAGE FOLLIES—Tuesday night at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

Here is the second "Follies" of a fortnight—an entertainment which will make no attempt to compete with Mr. Ziegfeld's poutpourri in its own field, but will be content to remain a modest musical revue. It will not be too modest, however—the company numbers forty-two, which is a considerable figure for the Greenwich Village Theatre.

Bessie McCoy Davis will head the cast, and the principals will also include James Watts, Suzanne Morgan, Jean Carroll, Charles Derickson, Bobby Edwards, Clara Tice, Irene Olson, Billy Holbrook, and James Morton. The chorus will be composed exclusively of artists' models.

If the entertainment lives up to its promise, it is expected it will unquestionably be transferred to an uptown theatre; in fact, negotiations to that end are said to be already under way.

"Gaieties of 1919," which the Shuberts have been preparing these many weeks, will be revealed in these parts in another week. In the process of manufacture it has grown far beyond the anticipated bounds, and is now destined for the Forty-fourth Street Theatre instead of the Nora Bayes. Its personnel numbers something over 100, and its scenes some thirty-five.

One more week will see the departure of "Please Get Married" from the Fulton. Otherwise there are no closings in prospect, but a week of hot weather would undoubtedly precipitate a general withdrawal.

BRITAIN STIRRING.

AMONG the evidences that the American monopoly of the motion-picture market is to be challenged is an article recently printed in "The London Daily Mail under the heading, "Those American Films." The writer admits that English people are going to see American pictures almost to the exclusion of others, and his purpose is to change this situation. In part, he says:

"Last night 2,500,000 people—or 3,000,000—went to British picture theatres—and saw American pictures.

"Why? For two good reasons. First, during the last ten years nearly all good pictures were American, which makes American films a habit among picture-goers, and especially among cinema owners.

"Secondly, the film industry in America is officially regarded by the United States Government as being the fourth or fifth industry of the nation, quite apart from any standing it may have as an art. In Britain it is far down the list.

"And yet the experts of the film business are agreed that there must be a change. The interest in learning of American manners, customs, homes, and ideals is now much less, which partly explains the need for British pictures here. And in the United States ten years with hardly a genuine British picture—plenty of American-made fakes—has created an increasing hunger, which powerful film men say only British-made pictures can satisfy.

"But though this dual situation is admitted, how is the thing to be done? Two good answers can be based on the two reasons given above for the lack of British films. Firstly, a few British pictures of each kind, athletic dramas, comedy dramas, adventure dramas, married life comedies, village life comedy dramas, serials, "sob" dramas, reform dramas, society comedies, business dramas, girl comedies, and bright educational magazines, of a quality equal in every detail to the best American quality, must be produced and thoroughly distributed. Some good British pictures have been made, a few of which have been sincerely claimed as fully equal to the best American standard. But absolutely impartial trade judges, basing their verdicts on the comments of the people as well as on the films themselves, have proved that lack of modern equipment and lack of experience as producers, art advisers, scene men, and players have always prevented the very best work.

"Therefore, to start the final breaking of the ten-year habit two or three perfect pictures of each kind must be made and forced into every district. These habit-breakers must be put everywhere by means of fresh, human, modern advertising and by means of special introductory prices set to force distribution regardless of loss.

"Now for the second reason: money. The whole theory of the British producer up to date has been wrong, in so far as he has not gone after big capital. The film business naturally cannot be made to pay in these days on a small capital when those American companies are working on so many millions. So the capital must be found. And it can be. The biggest American producing company has just raised £500,000 in this country with which to produce its British films here.

"If the Americans can do it, so can the British. One warning: many of the biggest film men in America will tell you that it will not pay as a business; that the stars and the heads draw from £5,000 to £20,000 a year, but that as a business it does not pay. One of the cleverest of them says: 'Please don't fool yourself by calling it a business at all—it's a joke, not a business.' Yet he himself has cleared £150,000 in two and a half years without capital. If it is a joke, it is certainly a good one. But the warning holds good, and the people who put up the capital, though they cannot lose if people using it are found, may have to take part of their profits in patriotic satisfaction at having put the British film business where it belongs."

A VOICE FROM INDIA.

A WRITER in The London Daily Mail speaks of Englishmen "learning of American manners, customs, homes, and ideals" from motion pictures made in the United States. Apparently many people regard the screen as a mirror of life in whatever country the pictures on it come from, but in India, according to Meherjibhai M. Ratura, it is only by assuring themselves that American pictures do not portray American life that the people can think well of Americans. What Mr. Ratura has to say was printed in a recent number of the Moving Picture World because, in the opinion of the World, it "has the ear-marks of sincerity."

The Indian says, in part:

"Cinema has been, since its birth, received, welcomed, and hailed as Universal Instructor. Its importance and value were believed to consist in its infinite potentiality of instruction in highest and noblest knowledge. Its utility was considered to be illimitable enough to cover all human activities, be they social, moral, religious, commercial, or any and every other. In short, Cinema was meant to serve noble ends. And, if the direction of the Noble and the Good was the only one it was to be turned into, it follows that it was to be held too sacred to be diverted into the opposite direction of the Evil and the Base. However, a single visit to a Cinema theatre in India is sufficient to bring painful knowledge to us that by Cinema films depicting human vices in their worst fiendish forms, Cinema has been hurled down from its glorious celestial regions and prostituted to the service of the Vile and the Baneful.

"For India's countless souls literally saturated with purity and spirituality, these films have a horror, as they behold therein but the deification of vice. In the fondest hope, earnest desire, and firm conviction of finding in the Cinema film something to learn, people here visit Cinema theatres as often as purse and leisure permit. Words are powerless to describe the almost ecstatic delight with which they enter the theatre, and the most horrible dejection and grief with which they leave it when the show is over.

"All the American films shown in the Indian Cinema theatres are—perhaps, with a rare exception at long intervals—found to be devoted to the only one task of depicting and vivifying deceit, villainy, murder, bloodshed, and all the vices that materialism has plunged man into. From the beginning to the end, each film, whether it be a drama of a single reel or a serial of a hundred reels, is nothing but diabolical savagery with the veneer of the present-day material civilization.

"Such films must necessarily be farthest from the very remotest approximation to the reality of the American life which is bound to be the noblest led by any race on the earth's surface. Hence, India wonders how it is possible that American people can allow such untrue and diabolical representation of their life to stand before themselves and other nations of the world, without resenting or blushing at it. I hope America will soon awaken to the imperative duty of making sure for itself that no American film depicts American life in untrue, distorted aspects of vices. Such gross misrepresentation of American life does no end of harm to America's people, for it makes them believe themselves capable of all vices, and it also lowers them in the estimation of other nations. Both the society and the Government should take prompt action to arrest the evil ere its cumulative effect gets beyond human control. If the writers of stories and dramas for American films possess no knowledge of the highest ideals of civilization, morality, religion, spirituality, goodness, and so on, they would do well to bend their knees at India's feet to learn all these, for, they require not to be reminded that India is not the land of blind materialists, but sages with universal consciousness."

High-Mileage Tires That Save Repairs On Spear & Co. Trucks

"We use Goodyear Cushion Tires to keep truck repair bills down. For example, we have had one truck in service for more than two years without any overhauling; the four Goodyear Cushion Tires on it have gone 24,563 miles and three of them look good for 6,000 to 10,000 more miles. Another truck is completely equipped with Goodyear Cushions, and they are on the front wheels of ten larger units. All these tires, thus far, have done 15,000 miles or better. The very first pair went 22,000."—George A. Daugherty, Superintendent of deliveries for the Spear & Company Furniture Stores, New York City

THE original purpose of Spear & Company of this city, in using Goodyear Cushion Tires, was to save truck repairs and, particularly, to avoid such engine trouble as might otherwise be caused by road shocks.

Now, after several years of observation, this mercantile institution reports that the resilient Goodyears have not only given thorough satisfaction in this respect but also have demonstrated unusual powers of endurance.

Officials point to a truck that has run on a complete equipment of Goodyear Cushion Tires for more than two years, covering 24,563 miles without any overhauling or a single tire change—and they call special attention to three of the Goodyear Cushions which look well able to travel 6,000 to 10,000 miles more.

They also point t the Goodyear Cushion Tires on the four wheels of another unit and on the front wheels of ten larger trucks, advising that all of these sturdy tires thus far have exceeded 15,000 miles of service—that the first one used delivered 22,000 miles.

This experience is offered primarily as an example of what a careful choice of truck tires, plus real tire care, can accomplish for truck owners—noting that the tires of Spear & Company are inspected constantly.

It is in order to secure these and other money-saving results for truck owners that Goodyear Truck Tire Service Stations study hauling conditions and recommend a particular type of tire to fit specific conditions—either Goodyear Solid, Cushion or Pneumatic. And they render a continuous service of inspection and care, designed to prevent any wasting of the big mileage built into these tires.

The fact that this scientific attention to truck tire needs is easily, quickly available everywhere in greater New York—to you, as a truck owner—is plainly indicated by the locations of the Goodyear Truck Tire Service Stations listed below.

THE PIANO GIRL

By JAMES GIBBONS HUNEKER

CHOPIN is said to be the favorite composer of the girl who plays the piano, although of late years there has been a healthy reaction to the noble and beautiful music of Brahms; even the Cossack Chopin, Scriabin, has his worshippers, Katherine Ruth Heyman at their head. But I fancy that more votes would be plumped for Chopin than either Brahms or Schumann. And this is not well, for Schumann has written the most romantic music of all piano composers, Bach not excepted. In Amy Fay's perennially interesting "Music Study in Germany" (1881) you will find an account of a teacher named Deppe. To him Miss Fay went after she had studied under Rullak, Liszt, and Tausig. Deppe had a method. Its principle was the weight-playing, of which we hear so much nowadays. Nearly a half century ago Deppe was teaching pressure-touch; also advising his pupils to let Chopin alone and study Mozart. I haven't the remotest idea of his method except these two important truths. Deppe also told Miss Fay that Chopin might be profitably shelved for twenty-five years—or did he say one hundred? Too much Chopin and not enough Bach and Mozart! Who dares to challenge the validity of this sound judgment?

For girls of 18 or thereabout, Chopin is a religion, a sentimental one. The Pole rules their souls. Symptoms of Chopinitis have been diagnosed by sympathetic medical men; they consist of inarticulate gasps, irregular sighs, the glance called psychic, and a faulty technique; and the last is the least curable. But can girls play Chopin? Before such a query the hardiest-souled male must retire abashed, else write with the usual masculine brutality and lack of finesse. I recall that in my salad days of criticism I said that boiling oil should be the penalty for the young woman who presumed to play Chopin in public. A broadside from numerous infuriated females—the word female is in good dictionary standing—made me speedily change the proposed punishment to the ducking-stool, and I positively refuse to budge from that position. As Chopin is in the emotional curriculum of every girl, the shock is all the more poignant if the question be posed: Can girls play Chopin?

Some may, yet how few! Let us be profound, let us quote rows of horrid, forbidding figures, for I am proposing to take a little journey into the misty mid-region of Womanology to prove my oblique contention. My progression may be crabwise, like the mental processes of most women, (and males.) There was an article in an English monthly some time ago by Alexander Sutherland. Written in fullest accord with the aims and ideals of the new woman, the author is forced to confess that "the male brain has an advantage of about 10 per cent. in weight," and adds that "it is a difference which certainly affords some little foundation for a very ancient belief," said belief being the inferiority of the female intellect compared with the male's. Yet he proves that 90 per cent. of women are the equals of 90 per cent. of men. And at the beginning of his study he demonstrates that the neurons on the cortex of the brain are quite as numerous in women as in men, and that these neurons "are the instruments of mental energy."

Mere brain weight, then, seems to prove nothing. It is the activity of the neuronic filaments that determines the quality of brain power. Music has been denied a place in the hierarchy of intellectual arts by shallow thinkers. Whether this is just or not, considering the vast claims of Bach and Beethoven, I shall not stop to consider now, but one thing is certain: in Chopin emotional sensibility predominates, (though he is the superior of Schumann in structural capacity—Chopin is almost a classic in his devotion to form; Chopin's form, be it understood,) and as women are supposed to be more emotional than their male mates, ergo—they ought to play Chopin better. But are they more emotional? The late Cesare Lombroso-Levi—father-in-law of Ferrero the historian—has measured the sighs of sentimental girls, weighed her tears, and he has declared that women are not more emotional than men, despite Rudyard Kipling and his "deadlier" female of the human species. In a series of public experiments conducted at Turin, the Italian psychiatrist found that woman as compared with man is deficient in tactile sensibility; that she does not record impressions, whether optical, aural, or sensory, as rapidly or with such clear definitions as do men. This sounds discouraging, but not enough so to give us pause to the upward flight of the unfair sex, if that flight be tested by scientific analysis alone. For what, indeed, is all this testing, weighing, and measuring when faced by the spectacle of a glorious winged creature who sails on victorious pinions and phrases with plumage unruffled? Where, then, is Lombroso and his laboratory logic? Even if woman may never compose a symphony like Beethoven, is she not intelligent enough to cast a vote against the Eternal Enemy, Man, and make him miserable by bridling his thirst and cutting short his eternal philandering?

A genuine feminist, Ernest Renan, whose sister Henriette was his companion and as a staff to him during the years of his Oriental studies, wrote of the mission of woman, though not always hopefully. He finds that "the general movement of the world has put itself at the service of the instincts of women, not those splendid instincts through which they display more clearly than men can, perhaps, the divine ideal of our nature, but the lower instincts which form the least noble portions of her vocation." This was written in 1855. Since then the Franco-Prussian war and the world war have supervened. Renan would write differently in 1920. The general tenor of the three authorities quoted—Sutherland on the brain, Lombroso on the sensibility, and Renan on the moral nature of woman—are hardly as hopeful as we could desire. However, woman never gives a thought to these learned men. She is, if musical, far more interested in Chopin himself.

That he was a Pole who went from Warsaw to Paris, there won fame and the love of George Sand, are facts that schoolgirls lisp. The pianist-composer belongs to the stock figures of musical fiction. He was slender, consumptive, played vaporous, moon-haunted music, and after his desertion by George Sand coughed himself off the contemporary canvas in the most genteel and romantic manner. Recall George Moore's description of that delightful professional invalid, Robert Louis Stevenson. "I think of Mr. Stevenson," wrote the Celtic Casanova in his "Confessions of a Young Man," "as a consumptive youth wearing garlands of sad flowers, with pale, weak hands, or leaning to a large plate-glass window and scratching thereon certain exquisite profiles with a diamond pencil." His keyboard was Chopin's window, and upon it he traced arabesques, tender and heroic, sorrowful and capricious. Such is the Chopin romantically conventionalized by Liszt and many others.

The real man was of a gentle nature, with a sub-acid temper, as befits a teacher of his instrument. Compared with a sailor or an actor, his life was devoid of dramatic incident. We see him giving morning lessons to a select group of prim, chaperoned, artistocratic misses from the Boulevard Saint-Germain, or to a few gifted young people; in the afternoon he made calls, or studied; in the evening he went to the opera for an hour, later in an enchanted circle of titled women, who listened to his weaving music, then a space for breathing at some fashionable café, and home to dream. His was a temperament prone to self-coddling. To the favored few he revealed the richness of his inner life. That he intensely suffered from petty annoyances before which the average man would shrug shoulders was the result of his hyperaesthetic delicacy. He must often have been the trying companion that good-tempered George Sand has described for us in that fibbing autobiography of hers. An aeolian harp! Yet no wind-harp ever discoursed such evanescent music as Chopin's piano.

And then there is the national element, perhaps the most fascinating of all the fibres of his many-colored soul. Chopin madly loved Poland, yet Chopin never locked his piano to take up arms for his native land, to fight or die for her, as did his countrywoman, Emilia Plater. Chopin sang his dreams, his disillusions, in his music, his fiery patriotism in his polonaises. A lyric poet, he touches us to the core and with exquisite tentacles draws our souls to his. Dead almost six decades, he is a vital musical force today. To play Chopin one must have acute sensibilities, a perfect mechanism, the heart of a woman, the brain of a man. Nor is he merely elegant languors and elegiac simperings. A capricious, even a morbid, temperament is demanded, and there must be the fire that kindles, the power that menaces; fluctuating, wavering rhythms, yet a rhythmic sense of excessive rectitude, a sensuous touch, a touch that is capable of a thousand colors; supreme musicianship—Chopin was first musician, then poet; a big nature overflowing with milk and honey, and, last of all, one must have experienced the tribulations of love, of life, until the nerves are whittled away to a thin, sensitive edge, and the soul aflame with the joy of death. Does this sound like mockery? All these things and many more that are indescribable are needed to interpret Chopin. Therefore I ask: What shall it profit a woman if she play Chopin but loseth love? I suppose that the answer to this in my mailbox will be animated, numerous, and illogical. The better we play Chopin the better we shall love! I hear some gifted flapper assert. That is the crux: Love, but what kind of love? Read "Maurice Guest," girls! It was written by a woman whose pen name is Henry Handel Richardson. For some emotional natures music is as dangerous as dynamite.

Who have been the most sympathetic interpreters of Chopin? The list is not large. Chopin himself was the greatest, although Liszt said that because of his physical strength he was not able to cope with his heroic compositions. However, strength is relative; Chopin could achieve the effect of a fortissimo by his management of "tactile values," his carefully graded nuances, from a whisper to a moderate forte. Liszt, the Chopinist par excellence, has never been approached, so his pupils aver. Anton Rubinstein confessed this, as did Tausig and von Bülow. I can see Joseffy's eyes fill when he spoke of Liszt's interpretation of the F minor concerto. De Pachmann, a Chopinist of rare quality, was equally enthusiastic if Liszt's playing was mentioned. I think Anton Rubinstein came nearer to my ideal of a Chopin interpreter; in the Barcarolle, the second Ballade, and the F sharp minor Polonaise he was fabulous. Eugen d'Albert played the Heroic Polonaise brilliantly; Rosenthal's E minor concerto is exquisite, because he studied the work with Joseffy, who had studied it with Tausig. That Pole was also a great Chopin player, and he was great in every school, from Bach to Tausig. Joseffy, Karl Heymann, De Pachmann, Paderewski, Godowsky, Josef Hofmann, Gabrilowitsch—these were and are the modern Chopinists. If Premier Paderewski doesn't receive a bomb at the hands of some grateful Polish "patriot," he may sit once more in the dim light of Carnegie Hall and weave his magic spells. Oremus!

Paderewski told me that he had never heard the mazurkas better played than by Marcelline, Princess Czartoryska, a beloved pupil of Chopin; and that is saying a lot, for we remember with joy the willful, charming performance of these dancing poems by Vladimir de Pachmann—whose tactile sensibilities are finer than any woman's. Annette Essipova was the most distinguished Chopin interpreter of her sex in my memory. I first heard her in 1876, when she was fresh from the Leschetizky musical and matrimonial racing stables. Twenty years later she had not measurably gained. Certain phases of the master were admirably set forth by Teresa Carreno—like Sofie Menter a heroic artiste—Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler, and now by Guiomar Novaes.

Each of the living pianists has his or her virtues, and to define limitations would be hypercritical hair-splitting. All the younger professional pianists play Chopin after the approved tradition, but while many are called few are chosen. Poor Chopin! Expounded by aestheticians, he is taught throughout the land, and mauled, maimed, thumped, and otherwise maltreated; and the soul of him is seldom evoked, but floats, a subtle wraith, with melancholy eyes over every piano in Christendom. Where, then, does woman enter this race in which sex traditions are topsy-turvied? If women are deficient in brain weight, in temperament, and in spiritual power, how is it that they dare attempt Chopin? Because, dear reader—and now I begin to draw in the large loop we have so patiently traversed—men of science deal with the palpable, and the time for measuring and weighing the impalpable has not yet arrived. Don't let us confuse essences. You may hook Leviathan with a pin, but the precious spiritual ambergris is not so easily come by. There is no sex in music, no moral, either; for one may be moral and intellectual and withal play Chopin like "five pigs," as De Pachmann used to say. And now for my coda: If the majority of women play Chopin in an abominable manner—so do the majority of men.

STADIUM SYMPHONY TO START NEXT WEEK

TWO evenings of the seven in each week, to start with a gala opening of the Stadium concerts one week from tomorrow, will be "symphony nights" from now till September for a host of New Yorkers who learned last Summer to take a new interest in serious music in the open air. The like has hardly been known since the old Thomas concerts in the Central Park Garden, or Seidl's Orchestra at Manhattan Beach.

For this relief much thanks will be due to the influential promoters from a town besieged by "jazz" at the present time of year. What is described as the "almost perfect" sounding board is being completed under the direction of the Stadium architects and engineers, with the aid of Edward Seidle, the Metropolitan technical director.

A committee of experts visited other places and viewed the sounding boards of Ravinia Park, Chicago, and Ocean Grove, N. J. As a result of their investigations they believe that the new sounding board now planned for the Lewisohn Stadium will be an improvement on all existing acoustic devices of this kind.

A Metropolitan star, Rosa Ponselle, will be the soloist in arias from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "La Gioconda" on Monday week, accompanied by the Stadium Symphony Orchestra, with the entire chorus of the Metropolitan Opera Company assisting. To meet the special character of the program, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony will be played.

The second night, an "operatic" program, will bring forward Forrest Lamont, tenor of the Chicago Opera Company, and Edna Kellogg, a contralto but lately added to the Metropolitan forces. The third night will be "popular" music, in the best sense, with Sascha Jacobsen, violin, and Winifred Byrd, British pianist.

Then come symphony, opera, and popular programs over again. Other artists to appear in the early concerts are Anna Fitziu, Blanche Consolvo, and Arthur Middleton. A regular feature, as was the case last year, will be the performance of good music on Sunday, under the direction of Arnold Volpe.

TSCHAIKOVSKY FOR BAND.

For the fourth week of free concerts at Columbia University a special "Tschaikowsky program" has been arranged for next Friday evening, to include the "Marche Slav," "Overture 1812," and "Pathetic Symphony." This will be a remarkable program for a band. Other numbers will be Bach's "Bourree," a Strauss waltz, and airs from "Trovatore."

Old tomorrow's program are Saint-Saëns's "Marche Militaire Française," Goldmark's "Sakuntala," overture, Gounod's "Ave Maria," excerpts from Wagner's "Master Singers," Verdi's "Rigoletto," and Lake's "Evolution of Dixie."

Mr. Goldman on Wednesday will conduct Chopin's "Polonaise Militaire," Litolff's "Robespierre" overture, airs from Puccini's "Tosca," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and smaller numbers by Tschaikovsky and Waldteufel.

The largest attendance last week was on Friday night, when it is said there were 19,763 persons in the campus audience. During the earlier weeks the leader reported having received more than 400 written requests for special music of the great masters.

OHIO HAS TROMBONE CHOIR.

Musical history will be made at the Methodist centenary celebration, recently opened at Columbus, Ohio, to continue until July 13, according to Professor William Kraft of Columbia University's musical department, who will direct all vocal and instrumental music at the meetings there. Unique in the annals of music, he believes, is a trombone choir of 100 instruments, said to be the first organization of its kind ever known to have been formed on so large a scale.

Under the direction of Frank M. Sutphen, a Columbus artist, the hundred players were brought together, and the instruments "relegated to the musical graveyard a hundred years ago" were brought out to blend in one triumphant chorus.

Edgar Stillman Kelley, who holds the chair of music at the Western College for Women, and who is best known as composer of "The New England Symphony" and "Pilgrim's Progress," made a new harmonization of "America," which he dedicated to the centenary's opening service by the trombone choir.

VARIOUS MUSIC EVENTS.

Hugo Riesenfeld has arranged to produce at the Rivoli a new tone poem by Charles T. Griffes, for which Adolf Bolm has prepared an interpretative ballet. It is called "The White Peacock," and is based on a poem by William Sharp.

Percy Grainger's "Colonial Song" will be hummed off-stage at the Rialto this week by Martin Brefel and Mme. Pascova during the presentation of a scenic moving picture called "Sundown."

Henry Lefkowitch and his Beethoven Symphony Orchestra will give a final indoor concert on Wednesday evening in Public School 63, at Fourth Street and First Avenue. Bernard Friedman will sing an air from Verdi's "Masked Ball," and Mrs. Lillian Croxton the laughing song from Auber's "Manon Lescaut."

Walter Pontius, tenor, will be heard another week at the Strand. He will sing "Macushla," and Ann Rutledge, soprano, will add "Mighty Lak a Rose."

ACTIVITIES OF MUSICIANS.

John McCormack took the oath of American citizenship on his thirty-fourth birthday, it is announced. For McCormack "fans," June 17 was the date.

Albert Spalding, the violinist, returned recently from Italy, where he served as liaison officer and later trained as an aviator in the war.

Anna Case entertained 250 wounded American soldiers lately at Mamaroneck. Forty ambulances took the men from Base Hospital No.1, in the Bronx.

Leo Ornstein motored from his Summer home at Bartlett, N. H., to Boston to meet his brother, Captain Manus Ornstein, a surgeon with the A. E. F.

Fritz Kreisler will make his first public reappearance since the war next Oct. 19 in Boston under his American manager, C. A. Ellis.

Guiomar Novaes is to revisit her home in Brazil, after many postponements during the war, returning to play next Fall with the Philharmonic.

Yvette Guilbert, a passenger for France on the Espagne, will return next Autumn to open a school of her own in or near New York.

Magdeleine Brard, Raymonde Delaunois, Raoul Laparra, and the Society of Ancient Instruments are all to make American tours next season.

Italy's Music in Matinee Today.

Patriotic Italians and their friends have announced a program of music and dances at Aeolian Hall this afternoon under the auspices of the newly formed Italian Musical League, of which Enrico Caruso is the head. Mlle. Dazie, the toe dancer, and Giuseppe Bonfiglio, ballet master of the Metropolitan, are announced in three numbers together, while others on the program include Mana Zucca, Edna Kellogg, Flavio Vananzi, and Pietro Yon.

Bonnet to Play Ocean Grove Organ.

Joseph Bonnet, the great French organist, will appear in three recitals at the Ocean Grove Auditorium on July 3, 4 and 5, just before his departure for France. M. Bonnet has now been in this country two years, appearing in concert and recital in nearly all of the large cities, ever since he received his discharge from the French Army.

Bamberger's Half Yearly Sale of Furniture

The Bamberger Half-Yearly Sales of Furniture have become merchandising classics, widely copied and commented upon, offering twice each year the most helpful opportunities for furniture economies and thrift in the Metropolitan district.

No other Bamberger event draws so large a patronage from New York City as does the Furniture Sale. Never have more thorough preparations for one of these sales been made than in this instance.

We urge your presence at a Sale we're proud to stage—a Sale you'll always be glad you attended.

BOLSHEVISM IN WINNIPEG

"One Big Union" Assumed Entire Control of City, But Was Ousted by a Bourgeois Committee

WINNIPEG, Canada, has emerged from Bolshevist rule. The dictatorship of the proletariat was broken by the counterorganization of a Committee of One Thousand, so called, actually numbering many thousands of that class which the Bolsheviki are fond of calling the bourgeoisie.

The "middle class" overturned the mimic Soviet and re-established the forces of order.

How the Winnipeg revolution was organized in New York, how it was planned to spread throughout the Dominion and thence to the United States, (the overthrow of government in this country being set for July 4,) is told in a copy of The Winnipeg Citizen, just received here. The Winnipeg Citizen is a newspaper published by the bourgeoisie after the revolutionists had suppressed all the others in Winnipeg. "We know the effect that a newspaper has in molding public opinion," said a strike leader, "and that in the past such opinion has been molded against our class. There will be no more newspapers until we decide to let them appear." The bourgeoisie thought differently; and the copy of their paper which has reached New York is dated June 9, and is No. 19 of Vol. 1.

Red Council of Five.

The revolution in Winnipeg, a city of 200,000, was the outcome of a Bolshevist movement started at Calgary last March, under the direction of the I. W. W. organization in New York City, at which a "Red Five" Executive Council was chosen. These men are named and described by The Winnipeg Citizen. One of them was a Vancouver agitator whose expulsion had been demanded by returned soldiers because he led a one-day general strike in that city in tribute to a military slacker who had been shot while resisting arrest. Another had helped in the same movement. A third was a Western Canadian miner who had demanded the release from internment of pro-German propagandists in Canada. Another had urged a general strike against conscription and another was a proclaimed Bolshevik.

Two of these men were arrested in a raid made by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and city special police the other day in their homes near the Labor Temple. In all, ten men were taken, charged with conspiracy and seditious utterances. Two others of the five leaders were reported to be in Montreal, and search was begun for them. The men arrested submitted without resistance, and the step was regarded as the culmination of the Winnipeg revolution.

The strike began in the metal trades, where recognition of the Metal Trades Council was demanded, and in the building trades, where higher wages were demanded. The employers of the metal workers had no objection to organized labor, nor to collective bargaining, but would not treat with the men in the "council." An offer of compromise in wages in the building trades was rejected. The strike began May 1, and the strikers soon demanded that 30 employes in other branches of organized labor in Winnipeg strike in sympathy. What happened thereafter is thus detailed by The Winnipeg Citizen:

"Efforts to avert the threatened general strike continued up to the moment of the strike, without avail. Mayor Gray, speaking from Premier Norris's room in the Royal Alexandra Hotel at 11 o'clock on the night of May 14—just twelve hours prior to the moment set for the tieup—asked James Winning, President of the Trades and Labor Council and business agent of the Building Trades Council, if the general strike would be canceled should the ironworkers at once agree to the men's demands. Mr. Winning's answer was 'No, it is too late to discuss that now.'

Determined to Strike.

"And that was twelve hours before a single union walked out on sympathy strike! This in itself clearly proves that the radical leaders were determined to bring about a revolutionary tieup regardless of justice, and that the cry that the strike is for collective bargaining or a living wage is nothing but tricksters' propaganda.

"All of this illustrates the fact that there is something far deeper than 'collective bargaining,' higher wages, shorter hours, &c., beneath this general strike. That something is a revolutionary attempt to set up Soviet rule in Winnipeg and extend it to all parts of Canada—in other words, to erect a Soviet republic in Canada.

"The movement was started on its way to a climax by overseas agitators who reached Canada some seven months ago. A convention of Radical Socialists, representing themselves as representing trade unions, was staged in Calgary early in March, 1919. It passed resolutions favoring general strikes to release political prisoners defined as 'actively working for the German Government in this country,' and for the establishment of a six-hour working day. It also passed resolutions favoring the establishment of a Soviet Government and 'Proletarian Dictatorship,' and other resolutions sending greetings to the Spartacans in Germany and the Bolsheviki in Russia.

"This convention decided to ask all unions in Canada to sever international trade union affiliations, drop craft organization, and join 'One Big Union' which could take 'mass action'—as in Winnipeg today—in any cause, the 'ultimate aim being proletarian dictatorship and control of all resources, industries, ad means of production.'

"The Western Labor News, the official organ of the present strike and its leaders, a newspaper posing as the official organ of all organized labor in Winnipeg, immediately after the Calgary convention launched an extensive propaganda supporting the 'One Big Union'—which is equivalent to the I. W. W. and the Bolsheviki in America and Russia, respectively.

"There is no doubt that Winnipeg was deliberately selected as the scene of the first concrete, overt act of the 'One Big Union' campaign and that the present general strike is it! The scheme was worked with a certain degree of skill, for these promoters of the 'One Big Union' idea were able to set up a cry of 'Wolf! Wolf!' alias 'Principle! Principle!' which, successfully served its purpose and deceived true organized labor into striking in the firm belief that it was striking for collective bargaining. In reality organized labor quite inadvertently but none the less effectively, played into the hands of the Bolshevist leaders—of Calgary convention notoriety.

Tieup Virtually Complete.

"So all efforts to avert it having failed, the so-called general strike became effective at 11 A. M. on Thursday, May 15. At first it brought about a practically complete industrial, commercial, and social paralysis. It wrought terrible hardship upon innocent people and threatened them with starvation. It immediately revealed the real issue—not as 'collective bargaining' nor 'living wage'—but solely the question of whether a free community was to lie down while a disaffected section throttled it.

"The street railway transportation in the city came to a standstill.

"The water supply was shut off except for a 'ration' of thirty pounds pressure, 'sufficient for all one-story houses,' according to the 'strike committee' which was then created.

"The pasteurizing and delivery of milk was entirely shut off and thousands of gallons soured at the railway stations.

"Flour mills were shut down and bakeries stopped.

"The delivery of bread ceased entirely.

"Downtown restaurants were closed, so that single men and women who occupied rooms and normally ate at restaurants were deprived of the means of getting food.

"The delivery of ice was stopped dead, in the hottest May in forty years, with the mercury at 95 degrees Fahrenheit.

"Postal service came to a standstill, and to complete Winnipeg's isolation, press and commercial telegraphers went out on strike.

"On the second day of the strike stereotypers and pressmen on the big daily papers struck, thereby shutting off all media of information so as to enable only the revolutionary 'O. U. B.' Labor News to present its own version of the situation.

"Telephone operators and linemen in the employ of the provincial Government were called out, shutting off service to sick people, doctors and hospital and preventing even women in childbirth from securing medical aid.

"The effects temporarily were complete and staggering. The disorganization of community activity was complete. The shutting off of postal service and the holding up of his Majesty's mails was a flat challenge to the Dominion Government. The shutting off of telephone service was a challenge to the Provincial Government. The rationing of water, the walk-out of firemen, and the consequent shutting off of fire protection; the Strike Committee's assumption of control of the city police force and the impairment of all other civic services was a challenge to the civic Government.

"The whole thing was an unmistakable challenge to every constitutional authority in Canada and, in addition, the curtailments and restrictions imposed upon the traditional 'liberty of the subject,' under the British flag, constituted an emphatic challenge to the fundament of the British Constitution.

Babies Near Death.

"Within two days hundreds of babies were 'on the verge of death for want of milk.' (The quotation is from the report of the Food Committee of the Strike Committee.) Sick persons were unable to get medical attention owing to the absence of telephone service. The sick in hospitals and elsewhere were tortured and their sufferings enhanced by the cutting off of the delivery of ice. People were hungry on the streets because meals were unpurchasable at restaurants, and in an area stricken with a scarlet fever epidemic, water could not even be turned on where required.

"The condition required a remedy, and it made its own corrective by bringing about the spontaneous organization of all citizens who, though innocent of any participation in the disputes between employers and organized labor, were made the chief victims of aggression.

"Many private citizens were in favor of collective bargaining—and still are—and were heartily in favor of labor getting all the wages it could; they were apathetic as to the original issues, but when starved, throttled, and threatened they lost all sympathy for the time being for anything but the restoration of their own civil and constitutional rights.

"A year ago a smaller strike took place, with civic employes out in sympathy with each other. A Citizens' Committee of One Hundred was formed at that time, and was able to bring about a settlement along lines suggested by itself. That committee never entirely died, and this year it formed a rallying point, a nucleus for the organization of a great force—the middle class citizens who were the innocent victims of revolution. The 'Committee of One Hundred' within twenty-four hours of the general strike's commencement became the 'Committee of One Thousand,' and that name is about ten thousand short at this time.

"The first effort of the committee, in conjunction with the civic authorities, was to insure food and milk to the population at large. Efforts of the Strike Committee to establish food and milk depots, with delivery limited to those who could produce a trades union card, were rigidly balked, until the Strike Committee was forced to agree to send back creamery and bakery workers to handle and deliver milk and bread to all as in normal times.

"By Authority of the Committee."

"The Strike Committee took advantage of even this situation to flaunt what they termed and boasted of as 'the completeness of labor's control,' for when the first bread wagon and milk wagon appeared on the streets it bore the printed posters worded: 'Permitted—By Authority of the Strike Committee.'

"Then it was boasted in The Labor News that the police were at work 'by order of the Strike Committee'; that bread and milk were delivered only 'by authority of the Strike Committee'; that water was kept rationed at only thirty pounds pressure 'by authority of the Strike Committee'; that theatres were 'permitted' to open to keep crowds off the street 'by authority of the Strike Committee'; that certain restaurants were 'permitted' to open 'by authority of the Strike Committee.'

"The man whose wife was dying had to walk miles to see H. G. Veitch of the 'Food Committee' of the strike organization to get a 'permit' to get milk from the Crescent Creamery. His wife has since died. Oil companies were instructed to sell oil and gasoline only on permit from the Strike Committee. Gasoline filling stations for automobiles were ordered to close up or be smashed up. Tacks, nails, and glass were scattered about the streets to destroy automobile transportation. To send a telegram out of the city you had to have it censored by the Strike Committee.

"It was the heyday of the Soviet system. Winnipeg was governed by a Strike Committee. The Soviets were allowed to get thus far only because of the unpreparedness of the military authorities for any such event as revolution. Those authorities had been busily and enthusiastically engaged in the highly congenial task of demobilizing unit after unit of soldiers home from the war.

"Then, when that offensive sign appeared, 'Permitted—By Authority of the Strike Committee,' the civic authorities formally requested General Ketchen, G. O. C. of Military District No. 10, to prepare for any emergencies. The city police force boasted its allegiance to the Strike Committee and had taken a strike vote—only to be ordered to stay on the job so as to prevent martial law.

"At the call thousands of citizens, being aroused to great indignation by the usurpation of governing authority by the Strike Committee, joined the Committee of 'One' Thousand. Thousands more joined a volunteer citizen army enrolled for the strike period by General Ketchen, and just as soon as military authority was ready should civil authority fail, civil authority exerted itself.

What the Citizens Did.

"The offensive poster, 'Permitted—By Authority of the Strike Committee,' was ordered to be removed. What is more, it was removed. Citizen volunteers manned the fire halls—as they had manned them from ten minutes after the strike started. The Citizens' Committee manned the city waterworks with a skilled staff which displaced the Strike Committee's staff, and water pressure was raised to normal. Two days afterward Winnipeg was visited by a decidedly more than incipient conflagration which, fanned by a stiff east wind, spread for two blocks. Had it not been for the water pressure, furnished by a Citizens' Committee volunteer staff and used by a Citizens' Committee volunteer fire brigade, a large section of Winnipeg undoubtedly would have been destroyed.

"G. D. Robertson, Dominion Minister of Labor, and Arthur Meighen, Minister of the Interior, came to Winnipeg shortly afterward and investigated. After investigating they stigmatized the situation as an attempt to overturn proper Government authority, to acquire control by radicals, and to extend that control all over Canada. They urged the citizens to stand firm and resist the attempt.

"They ordered postal employes back to work by Monday, May 19. Some returned and others did not; those who did not were dismissed from their posts and the vacancies readily filled. The Provincial Government ordered its telephone employes back by the same hour, but with little effect, and the switchboards were manned by women volunteers who rendered efficient service. The city of Winnipeg's employes, all of whom had negotiated new schedules by May 1, after seven weeks of collective bargaining, and who went on strike, were dismissed by the City Council, except such as would reapply for their positions and sign a pledge against sympathetic strikes in the future. Seventy firemen returned to their duties, together with practically all clerical staffs.

"All services, utilities, telephones, water, light, power, gas, and Post Office, and wholesale and retail deliveries are now practically at normal, except that on June 4 the Strike Committee, realizing its cause defeated, played its greatest card by ordering out the bakery and creamery workers and deliverymen on strike again, in an effort to starve the community into sudden submission. Within a few hours bread and milk depots were established in the public schools and the bakeries and creameries were promised adequate police protection. For several days prior to that date the strikers, headed by conscripts and aliens and some other returned soldiers, had been parading the streets and visiting the Parliament buildings, making wildly impossible demands for the immediate ending of the strike by legislation. R. E. Bray, leader of these paraders, declared himself a Bolshevik and in favor of establishing Soviet Government in Winnipeg—this in a conversation with Premier Norris and in cold blood.

"This so aroused the better element of real returned soldiers that they organized counterdemonstrations, pledging themselves to the upholding of constituted authority and demanding the expulsion of enemy aliens and the jailing of Bolshevist agitators. Eleven thousand of these men formed the Returned Soldiers' Loyalist Association of Winnipeg, on June 5, and at the call of the civic authorities supplied 2,000 men to act as special constables during the strike, for the preservation of law and order. These men, at the date of writing, are efficiently policing the city, the citizens having lost confidence in the regular force, the members of which obviously were partial to the Strike Committee.

"Demonstrations and counterdemonstrations having clashed, some fist-fighting having occurred on the streets with great disorder, the Mayor on June 5 issued a proclamation prohibiting parades and crowds upon the streets.

"In the face of the strong stand of governing authorities, backed by military readiness to put down disorder, the strike leaders have abandoned the boastings as to their Soviet ideals and 'Proletarian Dictatorship' and now state that legislation to make 'collective bargaining' compulsory will settle the strike, provided all strikers are reinstated.

"The Government of Canada itself has laid it down that the postal strikers never will be reinstated, so that any hopes of the would-be Soviet leaders along that line are doomed. The purpose of the strike being broken, the leaders are now relying on the pressure that they may be able to exert by means of calling strikes in other cities. The movement is not succeeding very well.

"The railway-running trade unions are trying to mediate in the metal trades dispute and have started overtures between workers and employers—their efforts being attacked by the extremist leaders and their newspaper organ.

"The city Police Commission, secure in the assurance of law and order being kept in any emergency, has demanded a pledge from the city police that they will rescind their strike vote, sever their allegiance to the Strike Committee, and guarantee not to join any future sympathy strikes. This 'ultimatum' has been thrice extended and now finally elapses on Saturday of this week. Failing this pledge, the police officers who refuse to subscribe to it are to be dismissed."

The strikers had assumed control of the city's affairs without serious bloodshed. There had been street mobs and hooting and jeering, but little violence. The bourgeoisie took control almost as quietly. The Winnipeg Citizen, after describing the situation, thus tells what happened:

"Here was the equivalent of Soviet Government as they have it in Russia. Here was the beginning of the revolutionary organization of society—the foundation of the intended revolutionary structure.

"It came so swiftly that few people realized what was happening after the press had been gagged, until they were apprised of the facts through the medium of a citizens' paper, which came into being through sheer public necessity. Since that time things have changed. The people, alive to the fact that the issue was revolution, have wrought a change.

Resuming Work.

"Now we live without authority from the Strike Committee. On Wednesday the delivery rigs resumed work from the Eaton store and the Robinson store and other stores—without authority of the Strike Committee. And as they were seen to come from the stables there were outbursts of popular applause—without the authority of the Strike Committee. Wholesale warehouses are now open—without the authority of the Strike Committee. You can go to a restaurant and buy a meal—without the authority of the Strike Committee.

"The Fire Department is fully manned—without the authority of the Strike Committee. Our public utilities are again giving adequate service—without the authority of the Strike Committee. Oil companies and filling stations are selling and distributing gasoline—without the authority of the Strike Committee. Bread is being made and delivered—without the authority of the Strike Committee. We can now get milk—without the authority of the Strike Committee. The city water service has been brought up to normal pressure—without the authority of the Strike Committee.

"That intensely offensive poster, 'Permitted By Authority of the Strike Committee,' is now a thing of the past, torn down under pressure of public resentment. The Labor News admits the loss of Soviet-like authority when it says that 'Delegate Russell reported that the Mayor had demanded the removal of the permit cards before any negotiations for settlement could be entered into'—and the cards which proclaimed the dictatorship of the Strike Committee have been removed from public view.

"Business as Usual."

"Business is now going on as nearly as usual as is possible under the circumstances, but the revolutionary structure has been dissolved and the normal order of society is increasingly being restored—the pendulum swung heavily to the limit of disorganization last weekend. It has now swung back again toward normal control by the duly constituted authorities. So much is this the case that the official representatives of the Strike Committee are now hastily disclaiming any intention to usurp the Government of the city, while last week they boasted of the completeness of their control. The peak of the disorganization of conditions in this city is past.

"Several unions have been ordered back to work by their internationals on pain of losing their charters and all benefits of International affiliation, such as insurance, sick pay, death dues, &c.

"There is one great matter for regret in this condition—that is, the unfortunate position of the respectable labor element which was betrayed into striking. Thousands of men, women, and young girls were ruthlessly ordered from their positions, and out of a mistaken sense of honor and fealty to their unions they walked out, feeling it a duty, but a tragic error. Thousands of these well-intentioned strikers of today are put to hardship, victimized, and deluded into suffering, and in some cases hunger, when they had no quarrel whatever with their employers and were satisfied with their lot."

Editorially the newspaper said on May 23:

The "One Big Union" campaign, of which the Winnipeg strike is really the first concerted overt step, has as its chief object the establishment of "proletarian dictatorship."

To the soldiers who voted sympathy with the general strike it may be interesting to read that the same "One Big Union" declares alien enemies "worthy of protection of organized labor," and that the "One Big Union" convention in Calgary last March sent fraternal greetings to the Russian Soviet Government and the Spartacans in Germany—and this is the "One Big Union" that The Labor News urges upon everybody, that Winnipeg unions are declared to have voted 96 per cent. in favor of, and that is trying to stage another general strike on July 1. All citizens should profit by this Winnipeg general strike and be warned in time.

Faithless to Contracts.

The Western Labor News printed a statement which illuminated the spirit of the Soviet dictators:

A signed statement published by Mayor Gray on Monday says:

"I shall ask the City Council on Monday night to pass resolutions to take back only such employes as will be loyal to their signed contracts."

The answer of the workers will be: "Nothing doing."

Commenting editorially upon this, The Winnipeg Citizen said:

When asked to abide by a signed contract, the Bolshevik's reply is: "Nothing doing."

Aside from the fact that the pledged word of any honorable man is as good as his oath, and that his signed contract is equivalent to his bond, and that the Bolsheviki have neither use for oath nor bond, the statement quoted above from The Western Labor News, the organ of the strike leaders, illustrates the nature of the philosophy which prompted both the strike and the quotation above.

It is the philosophy of Prussianism.

Plans in United States.

According to The Winnipeg Citizen, the headquarters from which orders emanated for the strike there are in New York City, and it says that the plants from which Bolshevist literature is being distributed are in New York and Chicago. The Canadian strikes were the first step taken on this continent to establish the "one big union" principle, which is intended to undermine and finally to supersede the American Federation of Labor. Bolshevism, according to this newspaper, is an American and not a Russian outgrowth, and it asserts that Trotzky formulated his plans in New York, before he went to Russia.

The plans of the New York Bolsheviki, or I. W. W., is to set under way in the United States on July 4, according to the newspaper, processes similar to those which for nearly a month crippled Winnipeg industrially.

CHURCH BEFORE PLAY

DR. KARL RIELAND, Rector of St. George's Episcopal Church, where the late J. P. Morgan worshipped, declines to recognize any sensational departure in his pulpit advocacy of a liberal Sunday. Not an inconsiderable portion of the religious community was startled two weeks ago when, following several pulpit declarations leaning toward greater freedom in Sabbath observance, notices were sent to the parishioners of St. George's that during June, July, and August the Sunday morning service would begin at 10 instead of 11 o'clock. Point was given to this announcement by this explanatory note:

"The service will be short and it is hoped that many will take advantage of this earlier hour to begin their plans for the day, inspired and strengthened by a visit to the house of God."

It may be added that, however other church-goers in New York regard the innovation, the Sunday morning attendance at St. George's has shown a decided increase.

Dr. Rieland is a New Yorker, born in Brooklyn forty-six years ago. He was educated at Trinity College, Hartford, and before being called to St. George's was attached to Grace Church, as an assistant rector, and to parishes at Winsted, Conn., and Yonkers, N. Y. He is a big framed, well-filled-in man with sledge hammer arms, deep chest, and a well poised head which is crowned with a shock of black hair.

His parishioners include many who are wealthy like the Morgans, ex-Attorney General Wickersham, Newcomb Carlton, R. Fulton Cutting, Allen Wardwell, and W. E. Curtis, but among them also are many of a very different sort. Situated in Sixteenth Street, just east of Third Avenue, facing Stuyvesant Square, it is in that twilight zone between the classes and the masses of Lower Manhattan.

"I think it is recognized," Dr. Rieland said, "that Sunday is the only day the great majority of the people have for rest and recreation. Even the well to do are tied down to responsibilities during the week more than we sometimes imagine. Our aim was to make it possible for our members to begin the day right by attending worship and still not interfere with any innocent, healthy recreation they had planned. Under the old plan, by the time the housewife attended 11 o'clock service, got home and prepared the dinner, cleared away the dishes and set the house in order, the afternoon was half gone and the opportunity for an innocent outing was greatly curtailed.

"Under the 10 o'clock rule, with a short service, she may attend church and still dispose of all her household duties in time for a full afternoon's outing. It is a distinct gain all around. The church doesn't suffer, but instead gains increased attendance, since many will go if they can get away early who otherwise wouldn't attend; and there is closer accord between church and parishioners because of the disposition the former shows in recognizing and catering to the human desires of its members. For the rest, as we have declared, we can see no harm in Sunday baseball or golf, motoring or boating, or any other harmless exercise or amusement."

Success Depends Upon Homes

A prominent expert in Home Management says, "Husbands and Children coming from well managed homes are best equipped to meet the day's work." Modern housewives are deeply interested in this subject, we know. It is our work to supply the foundation for good Home Management. Sensible home furnishings, suitable articles of good quality to make each room in the home conspicuously homey and orderly. We would like to show you how wonderfully well our plan of Liberal Credit co-operates with the ideas of modern housewives. It enables you to furnish tastefully and completely and spreads the payments out over a period of months to suit your income. It has real merit.

REMEDIES FOR LABOR UNREST

American Employer Discusses Whitley Scheme as Observed in England—Overcoming the "Three Big Terrors"

The writer of the following article is President and owner of large cotton mills in Connecticut and elsewhere, and was a member of the Employers' Industrial Commission sent by the United States Department of Labor to investigate conditions in England. He returned recently to New York.

By R. J. CALDWELL,
Special United States Industrial Commissioner.

SIGNS of unrest in the ranks of labor are healthy signs of national growth. Peoples who are content with venison and a string of wampum do not survive.

But the signs of unrest are equally signals of menace to that class of employers who decline to grow, who persist in the fallacy that labor is a commodity instead of accepting the laborer as a fellow human being, and who refuse to meet him half-way.

I am aware that in undertaking to discuss this problem I lay myself open to the epithet of crank from my fellow-employers, and to the appellation of apostle from the workingman. I do not aspire to either. I have merely come to the inescapable conclusion that we must apply to industry the principles of democracy which we are enjoying politically, and that our mills and factories must be governed with the consent of the governed.

Three Big Terrors.

We must abolish the Three Big Terrors of labor: the fear of disemployment, of ill-health, and of old age in a poorhouse.

A shop steward in England, a very intelligent fellow, told me while I was there that he had once been idle six weeks through no fault of his, and that it took him six years to pay off the indebtedness he incurred during that time. He was no idler, no second rater, but a fine type of fellow.

The fear engendered by experiences of that kind can be remedied by unemployment insurance. I find that many employers are afraid of the cost of this, but the objection is groundless. B. Seebohm Tree has found that the average unemployment in Great Britain during the last ten years has been but 5 per cent., and Secretary Wilson announced the other day that he had found the same average for the United States. Now any industry can pay 5 per cent. of its payroll, if need be, without suffering; for every industry adjusts itself continually to greater fluctuations than that in the market.

But it is not proposed that the unemployed shall receive full wages. That would put a premium on idleness. It is only proposed to pay, say, 50 per cent of the wage; and it is proposed that the laborers contribute one-third of that, the Government one-third, and the employers one-third. This reduces the employer's share of the fund to a figure so small as to be almost negligible, when the advantages to be derived are taken into consideration.

Health insurance, to cure the workingman's fear of want during unemployment due to illness would be absorbed in part in the other fund; but the measure which has just failed in the New York Legislature would have cost the employers, it was estimated, less than 1 per cent. of their payrolls.

The third remedy lies in insurance against old age and invalidity. All three remedies could be provided without taxing the employer more than 5 per cent. of his payroll.

Removal of what I have called the Three Big Terrors would contribute vastly to more contented labor.

Demands of Labor.

But that is not enough. The three fundamental demands of labor are the right to organize, (and of course that must connote the right of the employer to organize,) the standard day, now generally set at the eight-hour day, and the minimum wage, adjustable yearly and varying to meet various conditions.

As to the right of both capital and labor to organize, delegates from each side must have the authority vested in them by large organizations, otherwise they cannot meet success in trying to adjust their differences.

The standard day is legally in effect in England and in some respects in the United States, and can be put into full effect here in time, unless I am mistaken.

But the minimum wage raises a more difficult problem, for labor has just come to the astounding realization that high wages defeat themselves. Strikes do not contribute to relieve the situation. This is, for labor, a broad, new viewpoint.

During the war wages were advanced from 50 to 200 per cent. In my cotton mills, during that period, we gave eight advances, aggregating 107 per cent., and at the end of the war the workers were no better off than at the beginning, because of the advance in the cost of living.

The worker has thus come to realize that when he gains higher wages he defeats himself, because the increased price of production is reflected in the increased cost of the necessities of life.

And the increase to the consumer is greater than the actual increase in the cost of production, because each man who handles the product adds a little as it passes through his hands. When finally it reaches the retailer the consumer must pay a triple toll, or worse.

Wages and Prices.

During the war I found that my mill hands were paying 25 cents a pound for sugar. Of what use was it for them to get higher wages if they must meet such prices as that? I got the retailers of sugar together and told them that if they didn't cut that price I'd put them out of business. The price dropped to 11 cents.

That, however, was an example of profiteering rather than the logical and inevitable result of an increase in the price of production, such as reacts in a vicious circle upon the producing workers; for we must realize that workingmen constitute between 90 and 95 per cent. of the public. The workingmen, in other words, are the consumers.

What the answer is to this problem I do not know. I cannot see that it has been found, although it probably lies largely in distribution. I have suggested to Frank A. Vanderlip that we call a conference of economists this Summer or in the early Fall to discuss the question.

Pending that, we cannot do better than to profit from the example of England, which is much further advanced in meeting labor problems than this country or any other. For thirty years, disputes in the cotton industry in Great Britain have been considered jointly by representatives of employers and representatives of the workers with the happiest results. Seven hundred disputes were amicably settled in this industry alone last year, without a strike, and that is a fair index of the record of previous years.

The Whitley system of joint bargaining has now been voluntarily adopted under the direction and co-operation of the Government by industries representing about one-third of all the workers of Great Britain.

Increased Wealth for All.

The experience of this joint bargaining, this co-operation of committees of employes with committees of employers, marked by a fair administration of piece-work compensation, wherein the employe definitely understands he will not have his piece-rate reduced when his greater production results in greater earnings for himself, has resulted in an increased production in some cases of from 100 to 200 per cent., increasing thereby the national wealth of all.

If we are wise and not obstructive, our industrial transition period will be smooth, unruffled, and prompt.

It is inconceivable that progressive America should fail to profit by the experience of Great Britain and Australia in this direction. It would be un-American to require twenty years of embittered and costly strife to apply to our industry the benefits derived by Great Britain.

The radical labor element in Great Britain is advocating the public ownership of all industry in successive stages, because the working people generally have found it was difficult to get recognition of their rights from either Parliament or employers.

Secretary Redfield acknowledged the other day that government control of industry here during the war was a failure. If we wish to avoid in this country the issue of nationalization of industries, we will be wise while there is yet time.

A study of the British labor situation quickly convinces one of the commanding importance of this question, and it is a realization of this which is so important for America, in both its national and its international aspect.

It is possible our people do not comprehend the abnormality of the fundamental conditions underlying industry in Europe as a result of the developments of the last century. The features peculiar to Europe's industrial organization make it apparent why unrest in Europe is so acute. The recital of a few facts, as compiled by Mr. Lothrop Stoddard, may serve to make this plain.

At the time of the Vienna Peace Conference in 1815 there was not one steamship on the ocean.

In 1914 there was 30,000,000 tons of steam vessels.

In 1815 the entire international commerce of the world did not exceed $2,000,000,000.

In 1913 it amounted to $40,000,000,000 without in any way reflecting the activity created by the war.

In 1918 the aggregate of international commerce had increased to $50,000,000,000, which figures in some sense, no doubt, do reflect the effect of the war.

Europe, outside of Russia, has become a manufacturing community on a vast scale, necessitating the gradual congregation of a populace in excess of the food supply possibilities of the commercial nations of Europe.

North America has a population of fifteen inhabitants to the square mile; Africa about twelve; but in the last 100 years the population of Europe has increased from 150,000,000 to 460,000,000, equivalent to 120 inhabitants per square mile, which constitutes Europe the most densely populated area in the world.

This has necessitated the importation by the countries west of Russia of a large amount of food which was paid for by their manufactured products, thus creating the commerce requiring the great increase in the number of ships.

Here we have a condition which has been developing for 100 years and to which all the nations of Europe have gradually accommodated themselves.

Europe Prostrate.

The war, with its embargoes, lost tonnage, and other consequences, has disrupted the fine adjustment of the prevailing intricate and complex human relations, with the effect that Europe finds itself after the war prostrate financially, prostrate industrially, and prostrate in its food supply.

This has multiplied unemployment in proportion. And it should be borne in mind that from Belgium to Siberia and China not a single nation is maintaining itself without the aid of the Allies. They are getting deeper in debt and the solvent nations are getting more deeply involved.

With the increased cost of living during the war, which was not overcome by increased earnings, the workers of Great Britain gradually came to realize that wages alone did not constitute the solution of their personal economic problem. They have come to comprehend that it is the purchasing power of their wage which is important rather than the actual wage.

This subject is receiving the profound study of British labor leaders, who, as a rule, are remarkably well schooled in the principles of economics. Great Britain has probably gone further than any other country in the adoption of co-operative stores, in an effort to solve the question in part. We do not realise here how heavy is the tax of retail distribution.

England has solved the unemployment problem partly by a system of labor exchanges, of which she has so far 900 distributed throughout the country. They are placing in employment about 6,000 persons per day.

Whitley Scheme.

The solution of all these various questions by which England has profited and strengthened herself are the outgrowth of the earnest attention given to this subject, under the stress of war and under the impetus of the Whitley Committee of Parliament. The findings of this committee were that co-operation between employer and worker succeeds better for their common welfare than antagonism between the two. This is effected by joint councils, composed of workers and employers, whereby questions concerning the employes in their industry are the subject of joint deliberations.

It may not be amiss here to quote from the report of the Employers' Industrial Commission, of which I was a member, to describe the Whitley system in some detail. The Commission said:

Briefly the Whitley plan proposes the establishment for each industry of:

1. Joint standing industrial councils made up of representatives of employers and employes to deal with the larger questions that affect the industry throughout the whole country;
2. District councils constituted in like manner to deal with matters of local concern; and
3. Works committees also composed of representatives of the workers in each plant and the management to deal with conditions affecting each shop but not touching the larger aspects handled by the district councils or the national joint standing industrial council. Such matters as shop sanitation, the hours of beginning and ending work, luncheon time, and rest periods are to be dealt with by the works committee.

The Whitley plan is exceedingly elastic. It is not the intention of the British Government to force any cuts and dried formula upon the industries of the country, but national joint standing industrial councils and district councils are essential to a fully developed Whitley scheme.

Councils in Thirty Industries.

National joint industrial councils have been formed in thirty different industries, but the fully developed scheme, including district councils and works committees, has been established in only three industries, viz., matches, pottery, and rubber.

In several other industries works committees have been set up in many establishments in accordance with the recommendations of the Whitley Committee. Eventually these works committees are to be organized by districts and nationally into a true Whitley scheme.

That, in brief, is the form of industrial democratization which is proving most successful now, which has been adopted by one-third of the plants in that country and is spreading rapidly to others. We must adopt that or something like it, and there is danger in delay. The time has come when we must change our conception of labor. The employe should be a co-custodian of property, with employer—as a stockholder.

When times are dull an employer does not neglect his machinery or his plant. Why should he neglect his employes? Why should it be possible for him to neglect his employes?

Are industries for employers alone? Why should the employer determine the fate of the employes without ever consulting them?

Industrial Oligarchy.

Why should the employes not have a share in deciding matters which concern them quite as much as they concern the employer? The body of wage earners is vastly greater than the body of industrial managers and proprietors.

Why, after 140 years of democratic government politically, maintain an oligarchy industrially?

Commerce engages and dismisses labor on the same principle by which it supplies itself with any commodity. If a rubber manufacturer requires less rubber than usual the rubber can be stored without suffering any injury. But one cannot store away men and women, and lay them on the shelf like merchandise, to be taken down again at some future time when needed. Working men and women are living souls with human necessities and rights. They are just as hungry in dull times as in times of activity.

As France during the war stood as a bulwark in defense of civilisation against the savage attack of militarism, so Great Britain stands today as the bulwark of civilisation against the no less savage onslaught of economic disorganisation following the war.

Shall we leave Great Britain to shoulder this burden alone?

Can we hazard the risk of leaving it to her alone, and possibly see her exhaust herself as did France in the war, thus leaving us to inherit the burden by ourselves?

Had we entered the war sooner, the present stage of disaster would never have developed. Shall we delay again and invite further disaster?

World industry today is sick of the palsy and little short of a miracle can check it. If we do not invade the troubled nations with prosperity and create employment for their people, they will invade us with the red flag.

Our own industrial problem bears intimate relation to the general industrial problem of the world. While there is yet time, we must set our own industrial house in order, and stand side by side with Great Britain.

PRIVATIONS IN GERMANY

A DESCRIPTION of living conditions in Germany is given by the family of Ben S. Meyerfeld, who managed to leave the country only a few weeks ago. The Meyerfelds had been in Germany many years. The son of the family, though an American citizen, spent the greater part of his life there. He was 2 years old when he left America with his parents and is 19 years old today.

The going of the family to Germany in 1902 was due to the ill-health of Mr. Meyerfeld. He was suffering from an illness which made a stay at the baths of Wiesbaden necessary. The length of the stay was to depend entirely on his health, and was not considered permanent, so the family did not relinquish their American citizenship.

When Mr. Meyerfeld landed in New York he was wearing a suit at least three sizes too large for him. It hung loose and baggy, and made no pretense of fitting in any way. His wife's clothes showed similar signs of haphazard acquirement. The boy's shirt was torn at the collar. His whole make-up was worn and shabby and down-at-the-heel. They had several trunks and valises. The Custom House Inspector opened them up. Old quilts, old blankets, old clothes, worn almost to shreds. Nothing there seemed to be of any value. A friend who met the group said afterward:

"I knew that the man, though not rich, had had a modest income which should have enabled him to live in comfort of some sort. Yet his appearance, the appearance of his wife and family, the appearance of his luggage, all were contradictory to that assumption. The conclusion I reached was that they were virtually paupers; that they had spent their last bit of money on the passage home.

"Their story came out in detail later. Things in Germany simply could not be had except at prices above the reach of all except the wealthy. I found Mr. Meyerfeld in bed when I went to see him. He is an invalid, and moves about only in a wheel chair. He was wearing a cotton shirt, coarse, drab, and ugly.

"'Why don't you change into a nightshirt?' I said to him. He grinned at me. 'Nightshirt,' he repeated. 'Nightshirt. I haven't seen a nightshirt since the beginning of the war.'

"We invited them up to my house for dinner. My wife had prepared an ordinary roast, about three and a half pounds in all. They stared at it with astonishment. Meat! And three and a half pounds at one time! Just a short time ago, they recalled, the people were rationed, one-half a pound of meat a week. Time and again the family went hungry under the meagre supply of rations allowed them. The boy used to be sent out into the country to scare up a few vegetables to eat, but often his efforts were unsuccessful. Going hungry was no extraordinary thing for them. It seemed to them a thing undreamed of to leave a scrap of butter or a bit of bread on the plate to be thrown away. They couldn't understand it."

They told a story, in joking vein, as follows: A German decided that the world was too hard a place to live in, and decided to commit suicide. With this end in view he proceeded to fill himself with a large dose of Rough on Rats, thinking that would do the trick. It didn't. The Government had extracted the poison for use in war material. Thus balked, the man decided to choose a more difficult and more effective way of killing himself. He bought a rope and hanged himself. The rope was made of paper—the Government had taken over all hemp for war purposes—and it broke. The man gave up in despair, decided to live and joined the army, and three days of army rations killed him.

The real purpose of the family's return was to let the son grow up under American influences. Though American, he had lived only two years in this country. The greater part of his life was spent in the schools of Germany. When the war broke out he was intensely antagonistic toward the Allies. The only thing that prevented him from enlisting was the fact that he was an American citizen. All his schoolmates and friends were in the war. He says, however, that as soon as America entered the war his attitude changed. All of them in discussing the attitude of the average German toward the run of events in the country said the people were tired of the authorities that brought on the war. They spoke with bitterness of Hindenburg, the Crown Prince, and the Kaiser.

THIRD OLDEST GOLF CLUB

THE Knollwood Country Club, twenty-five years old, will have this week a three days' program of entertainments, with golf and tennis tournaments. There are two older golf clubs in the country, St. Andrew's, dating back to 1888, and Apawamis to 1892. The success made from the very start by those two clubs inspired John D. Archbold and others to organize the Knollwood Country Club in Elmsford, Westchester County. Besides Mr. Archbold the charter members include Charles I. Berg, J. Adrianne Bush, Edward H. Clark, Dr. Richard B. Coutant, Aug. T. Gillender, Charles J. Gould, Cyrus Field Judson, Austin T. Kelly, William M. Kingsland, Justice Charles F. McLean, J. Scott McComb, Justice William Popham Platt, Nathaniel C. Reynal, Marquise de San Marzano, Samuel Thomas, Lawrence E. Van Etten, S. L. H. Ward, Worthington Whitehouse, Howard Willets, Dudley Wolfe, and Charles C. Worthington.

In a very few weeks the membership was filled to its full quota of two hundred and fifty men, with their wives and sons and daughters, and the golf games were not only on but it was "on with the dance" and other social entertainments. The natural lakes, frozen in Winter, afforded skating, and the snow covered hills were given up to tobogganning, as they are to this time during the Winter months.

GREAT WORK OF RECONSTITUTING FRANCE

Co-operative System the Basis of Efforts to Repair the Fifteen Billion Dollars' Worth of Material Damage Done by the Invading Germans

WHAT France is doing in the way of reconstruction work has been summarized by Major George B. Ford of New York, a city and town planning engineer, who left for France early in 1916 as a member of the original group of the American Industrial Commission and who later was made Director of the Bureau of Reconstruction and Relief of the Red Cross.

This reconstruction work, or reconstitution work, as the French call it, falls into three distinct divisions: the agricultural reconstitution, providing for the peasants and farmers of the devastated areas; the industrial reconstitution, providing for the workers in the mills and factories of the war-ridden regions, and the village, town, and city planning work, providing for the housing of all of the repatriated French. The channels through which this stupendous task is being accomplished are three: the French Government, the French organizations functioning through the individual efforts of the Frenchman, and the various relief associations supported in the main by Americans.

Before going into the details of the French reconstitution work it is necessary to have a more or less clear idea of the conditions it must remedy. Major Ford shows how complete was the destruction wrought by the Germans. By his account the devastated area of France covers approximately six thousand square miles; in all about 2 per cent. of France, with a total population of 2,000,000 people. This is about equal to the area of Connecticut, Rhode Island, and part of Massachusetts. Something like 450,000 buildings have been damaged. Of these 200,000 are completely destroyed. According to the estimates of the Government engineers, the value of the buildings totally destroyed alone is $5,000,000,000. This does not include Government and administration buildings. The loss of public works has been estimated at $4,000,000,000.

The devastation of farm areas and field implements is figured at $2,000,000,000. The invaded regions of France constitute the richest agricultural soil in Europe. They form about 15 per cent. of the tillable area of France, and their crops average about 10 per cent. of the agricultural production of the country. The war rendered 3,000,000 acres useless for cultivation. The capital invested in the 250,000 farms which were situated in this region is reckoned at $400,000,000. That is the figure given for the pre-war period. Today, were they untouched, they would be worth at least twice as much.

Need of Farm Implements.

To recultivate what land will lend itself to recultivation will necessitate the buying of a vast number of farm implements, which the Germans either destroyed or packed off to their own country. According to the Government calculation, the following implements will have to be supplied:

51,000 side hill plows,
33,000 plain plows,
58,000 cultivators,
88,000 harrows,
16,000 beet extractors,
36,000 seed drills,
18,000 horse rakes,
53,000 root cutters,
30,000 mowing machines,
115,000 farm wagons,
50,000 rollers,
48,000 hoes,
14,000 fertilizer spreaders,
21,000 winnowing machines,
32,000 reapers and binders.

There are, besides, innumerable farm animals to be stocked up. Of cattle alone 900,000 were carried off into Germany.

The industrial situation is equally appalling. The machinery that was destroyed and carried away will have to be replaced before France can enter the competitive market and take her place as a power among the nations. The industries suffering most were those connected with steel and iron production. Before the war the total production of iron ore in France was about twenty-two million tons, of which over half came from the Briey and Longwy basins in the departments of the Meurthe and Moselle. These departments were in the hands of the Germans during the war. Seventy per cent. of the coal supply of France came from the Valenciennes basin. This, too, is in the invaded district.

The textile industry of France boasted of some 7,500,000 cotton spindles, of which 4,500,000 were in the region invaded by Germany. All of these were either destroyed or carried back into Germany. Out of a total of 650,000 linen spindles in factories in the devastated regions, 500,000 were either destroyed or removed.

France before the war had a total of 210 sugar refineries. One hundred and forty of these were operating in the invaded territory. The machinery in all of these was either totally destroyed or removed. The same is true of the electric power companies. Machine shops and foundries suffered a loss of $160,000,000 in machinery alone.

The forest land that has been destroyed by the Germans is estimated at 1,000,000 acres, which means that France has been deprived of 10 per cent. of her lumber supply and 6½ per cent. of her firewood.

Altogether the total damage in the North of France, including buildings, agriculture, industry, furniture, and public works, is estimated at about $15,000,000,000.

Destruction of the Soil.

Perhaps, however, the damage to the soil of France has been the most cruel of all. A trip through the recent battlefields shows mile after mile of land churned up by shell holes, full of dugouts, and criss-crossed with a network of trenches. The top soil is almost entirely gone, leaving nothing but a chalky, sandy substance, which is not fit for the growing of crops. The only thing that can be done here, and there are 250,000 acres of land in this condition, is the planting of forests, with the expectation that a half century or a century from now the leaf mold will create a new top soil. The Service of Reconstruction of the Soil, one of the numerous reconstruction committees, has a map in its office showing just exactly the situation of the areas that are utterly hopeless from the point of view of present recultivation. Whole villages to the north and east of Rheims, for instance, are to be wooded over in the hope of a richness of soil that may come in the future. Trainloads, boatloads, and cartloads of trees are finding their way into these regions. Most of these come from the United States.

In addition to the land entirely beyond the state of cultivation, there are some two million acres which must be leveled, cleaned, and fertilized before any crops can be planted. This is exceedingly slow work, what with the lack of labor and implements. An instance showing the magnitude of the task facing the population in these regions is the town of Baboef, in the Department of the Oise. Before the war it had five hundred inhabitants and fifteen hundred acres of land, of which twelve hundred and fifty were cultivated. In the middle of February, 1919, only ten acres were in a state capable of crop production. Of the ninety-five horses owned by the people there, ninety were taken by the Germans. Ten cows are left of the four hundred originally there, one pig of the fifty, and twenty-five hens of the original number of eighteen hundred. The prices on all of these animals have risen to at least four times their former value.

Prisoners at Work.

Nevertheless, through the service of the Agricultural Reconstitution Commission established by the Government, the land is slowly being brought back to some semblance of its former prosperity. German prisoners and Chinese and Moroccan labor is used to do the cleaning up. Trees are set up and seeds are being distributed. The recovery of Alsace-Lorraine has meant not a little to the French farmer in solving the question of fertilizers.

Farming implements are being turned out by various transformed munition plants, and the Government has set up a number of repair shops in the large agricultural districts. The work of repairing broken farm implements is done free of charge.

The Government has also organized a series of farming tractor batteries. There are ten tractors to a battery, and these are rented to the farmers at a small charge.

An interesting feature of the agricultural reconstitution work is the growth of co-operative agricultural societies. There are about one hundred and twenty of these functioning at the present time. The principle upon which they are founded is that of helping the farmer get back on his feet. As an organized group, the co-operative society is able to obtain prison labor, tractor service, seed and implement supplies more easily than an individual could. The farmer is also enabled to get a larger advance on his war indemnity if he is a member of a group of this sort.

Co-operative Agriculture.

The co-operative society works in the following manner: All the property holders place their land, tools, and seed into a common pool. They buy their material in large quantities and naturally get it at a lower price. Labor is hired in common and money is advanced in proportion to the interest pooled. In spite of the fact that the Frenchman is intensely individualistic, this plan has taken hold with remarkable rapidity.

The work of industrial reconstitution has also been most efficiently dealt with. Almost the day after the signing of the armistice the Minister of Armament became the Minister of Industrial Reconstruction, and the same factories which had been turning out munitions were immediately mobilized into an industrial army, manufacturing supplies of every sort.

To meet the enormous demands for industrial materials, the Government, through the office of Industrial Reconstruction, organized committees composed, half and half, of officials and manufacturers for the purpose of restoring the machinery and stock destroyed by the retreating Germans. The industries were voted a large credit for this purpose, and, through the various societies and associations, they have already effected purchases to the amount of many millions. These organizations are also keeping track of the labor demands of the various industries and are supplying barracks for the temporary housing of labor.

Another form of organization which has no small share in the solution of the industrial problem is the industrial co-operative organized along the same lines as the agricultural co-operative. The group movement among the industries is, however, very slow. There is one co-operative group in the textile industry and one in the metallurgical. Lack of co-operation among factory workers is due largely to the circumstance that the factories are widely scattered and each owner expects to find the way out for himself. Where a co-operative group is formed, it works in the following way: The manufacturers wishing to pool their forces turn their efforts toward the setting up of one of their plants. This plant is reorganized, supplied with sufficient raw materials and operated by workers of the various co-operating groups. The profits growing out of this venture are divided pro-rata among the members. A second plant is set up as soon as possible and so on until all the factories are running again.

The housing problem is being met almost entirely on a co-operative basis. The co-operative housing reconstruction societies started in a small way, during the Summer of 1917, south of Chalons-sur-Marne and west of Vitry-le-François. Their work, however, was completely destroyed during the second battle of the Marne.

The principle of these organizations is very much the same as that of the agricultural and industrial co-operative plans. The first arrangement the Government made for the making of advances on indemnities on war-devastated buildings was 50 per cent. on the appraised value on a basis of pre-war prices. This was later raised to 75 per cent. for individuals and 90 per cent. for the co-operative groups. The added 15 per cent. was a considerable inducement to the formation of these organizations.

The co-operative group treats with a single architect, engineer, and contractor. As a result, doors, windows, mangers, and farm buildings are being standardized.

The usual procedure under which the constructional co-operatives work is to build first the "grange," or the large storehouse for the village. This is used as a pivotal building from which all future buildings and the life of the village radiate. It is so constructed as to allow for storage of grain, temporary living quarters for those who need them, and shelter for animals. The men in charge of the execution of the work see to it that the cost does not exceed the eventual war indemnity. The bills are paid by the Executive Committee elected by the co-operative group, the Government making cash advances on them up to 90 per cent. of the indemnity.

Where the tendency of a village or town is against co-operation, the Government is replacing destroyed buildings by supplying barracks and standard farm buildings to individual families. These farm barracks consist of two rooms and a shed. The cost of one of them is about $900. This apparent extortionate price is due to the serious wood shortage in France. Wood that cost from 50 to 80 francs a cubic meter before the war now sells at 500 to 600 francs. Both the American and the British armies during the war cut off a large quantity of wood for their own use. It is planned to return this wood. The deliveries, however, cannot be accomplished fast enough to cover the present emergency on account of lack of proper transportation facilities. Large orders for wood have been placed in Sweden and Norway, and France undoubtedly will be able to get a great deal more from Germany and Austria.

A more extensive housing plan has been prepared for the larger cities. A bill definitely bearing on this problem has just been passed by the Senate of France. This provides that every city and town of 20,000 inhabitants must submit plans and specifications for replanning and extension within three years after the signing of the law, and, furthermore, that within three months after its signature plans must be drawn up for improving all the devastated areas. The cost of these plans is to be paid by the State.

Already several cities have taken active steps to put this law into execution. The town of Lille during the war, and even during the period of German occupation, was busily engaged in collecting data for an eventual plan of rebuilding. Architects and engineers have been making city plans for Rheims for the past three years.

Housing Problem Plans.

During the Fall of 1917 the architects and agricultural engineers working with the Government held a competitive exhibition of improved plans for farm building. There were four different groups of plans embracing the need of the regional customs and habits of the four sections of the devastated regions.

To secure the best results of this housing program, the architectural societies of France have organized themselves into a federation known as the National Federation of Societies of Architects and have offered their services to the Government.

The American Red Cross Bureau of Research for Refugee and Reconstruction Problems, in line with this work, has organized a committee from the foremost French agricultural engineers, architects, and contractors, established a drafting room, and has worked out a series of studies for putting up buildings that are within the reach of the people for whom they are intended. This committee is today working on plans for better agricultural methods, farming layouts, dwellings, and sanitation.

The federation of architects, engineers, and contractors has induced the Government to give it a credit of 1,000,000 francs for the purpose of creating stocks of materials in the different main centres of the devastated districts. This credit is charged against the various Government services engaged in the reconstruction work. It has also asked the Government to vote an additional credit of 2,000,000 francs to be used as a subsidy for the contractors to help them start things going. A permanent bureau has been formed called the Office of Batiment, or Building Bureau. The Executive Committee of this bureau is made up of the Presidents of the leading architectural and engineering societies, who have organized with the purpose of securing better methods for handling construction plans and materials.

Work of the Refugees.

Not the least important work in the reconstitution of the devastated regions is the work done by the refugees themselves. Of the 2,000,000 people who were forced to leave their homes at the time of the German invasion about 500,000 have returned. These have, in a good many instances, organized themselves into committees and associations. In many cases these committees have been doing work important enough for the Government to allow them a subvention. Part of their work consists in keeping track of the whereabouts and conditions of all the people in their districts. They look after the money grants and the settling of Government pensions. Where a member is in urgent need of funds they lend it to him out of the common exchequer.

One of the most interesting things they have done is the establishment of a number of daily and weekly newspapers. These deal with all affairs which are of particular interest to the refugees, such as the laws and decrees passed by the Government for their assistance. These papers have a total circulation of 125,000, and the largest, the Journal du Nord, has a circulation of 35,000. They all make a point of printing long lists of names and addresses of refugees, and the names and locations of the different employment and welfare centres. The more important of these papers are partly supported by the Government, the amount contributed being charged to the budget of public utilities.

The largest of the refugee committees is the Federation des Associations des Sinistres. This is a union of all the refugee societies, united for the purpose of mutual protection. This association has fought through the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate various bills of interest to the refugee. It is admitted to be one of the greatest lobbying forces in France today. One of the most important bills this federation has put through is the "Dommage de Guerre" bill. (War Damage bill.) It provides that all damage to the property of individuals occurring by act of war shall be paid by the Government in full. This is the first time that any country has voted to pay, in full, damages sustained by its people during a war.

American Agencies at Work.

The American Relief Associations in France are today directing all their efforts into the channel of reconstitution work. Since the armistice was signed the Red Cross has had an understanding with the French Government whereby the two of them work in conjunction in meeting the needs of the people in the devastated regions. During the month of February the Red Cross shipped more than 4 thousand car loads of materials and supplies from the stock in the former war zone bases.

Large quantities of beds and bedding are shipped from the many hospitals now rapidly closing. Vacated barracks are being transported to those districts where the housing problem is especially difficult. One hundred and seventy-five of these buildings have been ordered from America. The Red Cross does not erect these barracks nor does it give them directly to the individuals, but distributes them through the French Reconstitution Committees.

The work of the Y. M. C. A. is equally important. The Foyers du Soldat, similar to the "Y" huts put up for American soldiers, are now being turned into community centres where educational work of every kind is being inaugurated. There are 1,300 of these in France at the present time.

There are, in all, about sixty relief units working in the devastated territory, most of which are wholly or partly supported by American funds. There is room for all of them. The Anglo-American Friends Unit is today concentrating its work in the neighborhood of Verdun, helping to receive the refugees and set them up in life again. The Smith College Unit is tackling the same problem in fifteen villages between Ham and Nesle assigned them by the French Government. The American Committee for War Devastated France have established themselves in the Department of the Aisne and are giving considerable aid in medical and agricultural instruction and equipment. There are scores of other units too numerous to mention in detail, all concentrating on the meeting of the big problem of the day—the reconstitution of France.

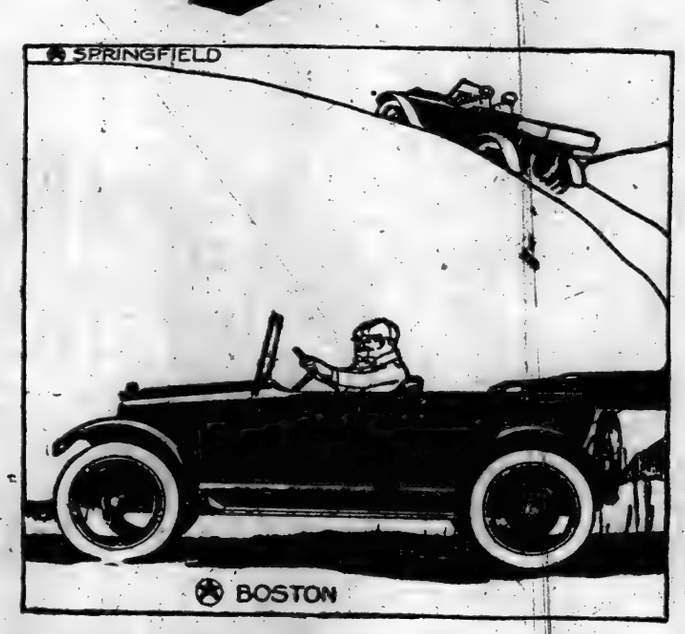
Overland



Still Another Endurance Record

More than 3852 miles in 168 hours of continuous running, at an average speed of 25 miles an hour, without a stop of the motor or variation in the fixed schedule.

That is what two stock Model 90 cars did in 7 days and 7 nights non-stop run recently held between Boston and Springfield. In spite of heavy rains and deep mud in places, these cars maintained a perfect daily score, from start to finish, and proved Overland reliability and economy with a gasoline average of 21 miles to the gallon.

This performance is just one more public manifestation of the many private experiences of Overland owners everywhere. They know from thousands of every day instances what Model 90 can and does do under the most exacting conditions.

BIG MOTOR PROBLEM IN PROPER REPAIRS

Unskilled Mechanics Do Most of the Work —Practical Plan Outlined to Improve Shop Efficiency

Probably ninety-nine out of every hundred motor-car owners have at various times been roused to the boiling point of indignation at the high prices charged for repairs and the poor results often obtained. The owner naturally looks upon himself as the victim, whereas many times he is the culprit, because, ignorant of the mechanical features of his car, he leaves necessary repairs until parts have become badly worn and is then appalled at the cost.

On the other hand, it has long been recognized by repair and service men that the skilled mechanics in their workshops are too few to give a fairly good average of repairing efficiency. The problem of improving the standard of the workers has been frequently discussed, but until the present time no satisfactory method of solving the difficulty has been advanced.

An organization was formed in this city a few days ago which has set itself to deal with the difficulty of proper automobile repairs in a practical and broad-minded manner. It is known as the Society of Automotive Mechanics of America. R. C. Rognon, mechanical superintendent of a motor truck concern, is President and it has enrolled about one hundred members. It aims, briefly, to raise the standard of automobile mechanics and, thereby to give more complete satisfaction to motor-car owners in the excellence of the work done in the shops.

A circular issued by the society states its principles very concisely, and, if carried out, the entire automobile industry from the manufacturer down will be greatly benefited. It is frankly stated automobile repairing is a deeper study and requires more skill than it has been given credit for.

"Under the present conditions in the shops," it states, "the building of a car costs the owner too much money, and he so seldom gets the expected results that he will keep his car on the road till it breaks down. This belated effort of repairs is costly because of a large number of parts that are necessary. Rebuilding of cars at the proper mileage interval is the cleanest, most profitable class of repair work, but in order to put it on a commercial basis we must develop better shop equipment, special tools, and outline some system for the mechanic to use in tearing down and rebuilding.

"A skilled mechanic must have some training as a machinist, must know the fundamental principles of electricity, must know the principles and peculiarities of the internal combustion motor, and must also develop a very high degree of mechanical skill. Admitting the fact that we are producing a product with over 75 per cent. of inefficient producers and that the price we are getting for this product is too high for our inefficient producers and entirely too low for our efficient ones, we must educate the majority and recognize the minority."

There is very little inducement, it is stated, for the skilled mechanic because he is not paid on the basis of production. The unskilled producers are satisfied, while the skilled men either make the best of unsatisfactory conditions or sacrifice their mechanical skill for some other branch of the automobile business.

The society hopes to change these conditions by a systematic classification of workmen. The plan proposed is by a practical examination to show the inefficient men what they lack and also give due credit to the master mechanic. The method is to give applicants a written examination of 25 per cent. theory and 75 per cent. of practical mechanical and electrical knowledge of methods used in repairing. The examinations will be passed on by a board consisting of a representative of each standard make of car and truck.

The results will be filed for reference and for the use of dealers wishing to secure master mechanics, superintendents, and service managers. In effect, the system will resolve itself into an employment bureau, for, while mechanics cannot be compelled to submit to the examinations, it is believed that dealers and others will quickly see the benefit of giving preference to those who have passed the required tests, as the men will receive a certificate stating their individual qualifications and an emblem pin. In the course of two years the society hopes to complete a series of mechanical manuals, practically got up with photographs and outlining a system to use in rebuilding all the standard makes of cars and trucks.

It is a big proposition, but one that is vitally needed at the present time. The officers have called a meeting tomorrow night at the Automobile Club of America, at which all the leading service managers and superintendents, in addition to many other automobile representatives, have been invited to discuss the situation and offer additional suggestions for constructive work.

The Briggs & Stratton Company of Milwaukee, which, during the war, operated a plant for the production of hand grenades, has purchased the Smith Motor Wheel, a power plant attachment for bicycles, from the A. O. Smith Corporation of the same city.

F. L. Sanford will be the manager of the new branch soon to be opened here at Broadway and Fifty-eighth Street by the Dort Motor Car Company.

The formation of a $3,000,000 corporation, incorporated under the laws of Delaware, is announced by the Fressman Tire and Rubber Company of Philadelphia. The company has purchased for $600,000 the former North Broad Street home of the Maxwell-Chalmers cars.

CLOGGED FUEL LINE.

Points on Keeping a Satisfactory Flow of Gasoline.

President, Stewart Automobile School.

One of the most baffling troubles to locate is an obstruction in the gasoline line from the tank to the carburetor. Some carburetors have a strainer where the gasoline enters the float chamber, and others have a strainer on some part of the gasoline line. There is one on the vacuum tank where the supply from the main tank enters at the top. These are all easily removed for cleaning, but sometimes clogging occurs at a bend in the pipe, and then it cannot be so readily reached. In such cases the pipe is removed from the carburetor and the operator blows back against the stoppage. This frequently loosens it, and the gasoline is allowed to flow, carrying the dirt with it.

This trouble usually comes on gradually, due to a few pieces of lint, chaff, dust, &c., accumulating on the strainer. There is at first plenty of room for the passage of the gasoline, but soon the accumulation allows only enough gasoline to pass through to run the engine at normal speed. When trying to speed up the engine it does not respond. The gasoline cannot flow through fast enough. The engine weakens, may backfire at the carburetor, and soon stops. Gasoline can get through, but not fast enough to supply the engine.

While searching for the trouble the float chamber fills and the engine may be started. This is the characteristic symptom of a clogged gasoline line. The engine stops, but may be started after a time, only to stop again. Where a strainer is accessible it is well to clean it occasionally, but the average operator waits until the troublesome symptoms develop.

AUTOS IN DUTCH INDIES.

American Cars Predominate — Advice to Prospective Exporters.

The American automobile dominates the markets of the Dutch East Indies, reports Consul A. E. Carleton of Batavia, Java. There are approximately 12,000 cars in use throughout the archipelago, and practically all the cars sold since 1915 were American. Previous to that time the popular motors were Italian and French. Imports for the last three years have averaged about 2,500 yearly.

There are certain conditions, he points out, which require some consideration on the part of American manufacturers, if the present domination of trade is to be maintained. The special requirements of a car for the market are an adequate cooling system, as the heat is naturally tropical, and in the mountains particular attention must be paid to this feature; a motor powerful and flexible enough to take easily the numerous hills and to cover long distances, and a good gear and springs large and strong enough to insure easy riding qualities.

ADOPT AMERICAN SYSTEM.

Left-Hand Control a New Departure in English Cars.

Among the minor improvements noted in some of the new models of English cars being prepared for the market is the adoption of the American system of central fitting of the change-speed and hand brake levers, operated by the left hand.

Left hand control was introduced in this country because the manufacturers had reverted to the early practice of placing the steering column on the left side of the car. When they send cars to Europe they have to transfer the steering to the right, but cannot so easily change the position of the control levers.

Although the system was not introduced for any merits of its own, says a British writer, but merely because of the left-hand steering, it does as a matter of fact possess incidental advantages. The change-speed lever works directly on to the gear box instead of at the end of an arm, while the system also solves the vexed problem of how to provide means for the driver to enter his seat from his own side. The only disadvantage is the fact that the levers may get in the way of a lady's dress or a man's extra long and wide coat in winter.

No Dogs in Yosemite Park.

Motorists planning to visit Yosemite Park will do well to heed the warning recently announced that no dogs can enter the preserve. Allowing dogs in the park under restriction has been tried out during the last two years, but was found to be unsatisfactory, with the result that the service has ruled against their being allowed under any condition.

JORDAN

Prophetic of Imitation

Irresistible is the lure of exquisite lines and rich colors, caught and embodied in this newest motor car — the Jordan Silhouette.

Note the cocky tilt to the front seat cowl—the perfectly flat top-edge—the fenders distinctively different.

In the deep tonneau, there is a cordovan leather boot and saddle bag—a pleasant surprise for everyone who has grown tired of new-fashioned things and craves the old.

The Silhouette is built for either four passengers or seven. And you have your choice between Burgundy Old Wine and Brewster Green for the finish —either is good.

O-Cedar Polish

©CCCo1919

YOUR car can be made to look the part. You can give it the gloss and glitter it had when you were so proud of it.

To do this is simple and easy. And with but little work and no muss or bother.

O-Cedar Polish is Sold by all Dealers

Channell Chemical Company, Chicago Toronto London Paris

Use O-Cedar Polish the O-Cedar Polish Way

First, remove mud, dust, etc., from your car by washing with water in the usual way.

If you have used oils, or wax, it is best to use Ivory Soap to remove them.

Pour about 4 ounces of O-Cedar in a pan and add a quart of warm water. Saturate a clean cloth in this and go over the body of the car. Do not attempt to clean too much at a time—take one side of the body or a fender first. Follow by rubbing with a dry cloth. But little rubbing is required to produce a hard, dry, lasting lustre.

WISE MOTOR PLANNING MAKES CHEERFUL TOUR

Car Should Be Put in Prime Condition and Proper Equipment Carried to Meet Ordinary Emergencies

By H. CLIFFORD BROKAW,
Technical Director, West Side Y. M. C. A. Automobile School.

In the long run, the successful automobile tour is the one that has been carefully planned not only in respect to the general route but necessary preparation against the various emergencies which may arise to cause annoyance and delay.

The car should be thoroughly cleaned before going on a tour. This means not only the parts which show, but the working parts underneath. The transmission and differential gear cases should be drained, washed out with kerosene and have fresh lubricant. Grease cups and hub caps need refilling, steering gear the same, cleaning if needed, and every working part should be inspected for wear while being lubricated. Clean the crank case and run kerosene through the lubricating system. Then drain it off and put in fresh oil.

If the engine is inclined to knock on hills have the carbon removed before starting. Test out the compression and grind in the valves where needed. Examine the spark plugs and make sure of the extra ones, look over the wiring for worn insulation, loose wires, and other defects. See that the magneto or breaker points are clean and properly adjusted, and that the distributer is clean, and make sure that the battery has a good charge. Take along a set of dry cells if there is no magneto. If necessary have the battery recharged at a service station.

The generator and starting motor commutators need inspection and perhaps cleaning. Look well to the springs. They do crack and a broken leaf is likely to make trouble on tour. Replace the cracked ones and carry a repair attachment. The tires should be in condition to stand the trip; two extra shoes with tubes inflated ready to put on are needed and extra tubes according to the length of the trip. Also have cement, patches, and a rapid vulcanizing outfit.

Make sure that your fire extinguisher is filled and in working order. You will not need the extinguisher often; when you do it is worth the price of the car.

Some of the things worth while taking for emergency are: Set of ignition brushes, boxed and labeled; tow rope; jack and handle and two blocks of wood to rest jack on; box of plungers for tube valves; three-in-one valve tool; tire pressure gauge; wrench for interrupter points; file for cleaning the points; hydrometer or voltmeter for testing storage battery; oil squirt can, filled; box of assorted nuts, assorted cap screws, lock washers, and cotter pins; spool of copper wire and one of soft iron wire; extra set of electric light bulbs; clean waste or rags; set of fuses, if used on car; folding canvas pail; full set of tire chains and chain tool; extra cross links.

Most of these things should be boxed and labeled as they will be used seldom. Naturally pliers of one or two sizes, a small hammer, wrenches to fit car nuts, a cold chisel or two, tools for tire removing and engine valve removing, and the regular tools used about the car should be in the tool box. Always carry an extra gallon of oil and, unless there is a reserve gasoline tank on the car, take a gallon can of gasoline.

Because of the multitudes of cars on main highways, more comfort will be found, with less dust, by planning a trip off the beaten paths, for there are plenty of good, or fair, roads not mentioned in the usual touring routes.

Do not plan a trip which calls for top speed to make the stops. Rushing around to get somewhere for lunch so there will be time to get to some other place to sleep is too much like a race. If you get ahead of schedule, hunt out beauty spots for a visit. Between Port Jervis and Delaware Water Gap there are four or five side trips to charming waterfalls.

Summed up, the requirements of the perfect tour are working knowledge of your car, equipment for quick repairs or adjustments, and time to enjoy yourself.

SIMPLE OPERATORS' LAW.

Michigan's New Act Asks Thirteen Questions—Fee Is Fifty Cents.

Michigan has just adopted an operators' license law. It will go into effect on Aug. 14 and by that time every resident of the State who wishes to drive an automobile must fill out the new application blank and pay a fee of fifty cents. This is considerably cheaper than the $2 fee required under the new law for New York City motor car operators, and the application blank is also much simpler, consisting of only thirteen questions. Outside of the customary questions for personal identification, the applicant will be asked if he has ever been convicted for violation of any motor vehicle law or ordinance and, if so, to state its nature; if his license has ever been revoked or suspended; if he has any physical defect which might affect the operating of a motor vehicle, and how many miles the applicant has driven.

This is simple and in marked contrast to the forty-odd questions provided in the new questionnaire for New York City motorists.

Michigan has more than 300,000 motor operators. The blanks when filled out will be sent to the chief of police in cities and to the sheriff in rural communities, and when marked as correct will be forwarded to the Secretary of State.

The licenses will be printed on cloth stock, and when folded once horizontally will be 2¾ by 4½ inches in size. The law requires that licenses be carried on the person of the driver at all times when operating a car.

RED CROSS MOTOR CORPS.

More Than 10,000 Women Have Driven Cars in American Work.

Through the Red Cross Motor Corps more than 10,000 women of America, supplying their own cars, have been providing pleasure trips for convalescent soldiers in hospitals in the United States. The monthly report of one military hospital shows 1,294 convalescing men and 143 nurses taken for drives and 726 convalescents taken to theatrical performances.

A report of the activities of the organization in New York City from October, 1918, to the present month, announced yesterday by Albert W. Staub, acting manager of the Atlantic Division, shows that during that period the corps transported 1,618 litter cases, 13,153 ambulatory cases, 6,185 nurses, 11,441 casuals, and 11,965 soldiers on recreation trips. They represented a total of 578,043 miles, 136,714 hours, and a total daily use of 6,566 cars.

The corps has also aided in the evacuation and debarkation of sick and wounded from the ships to the various hospitals, and has done a large share of recreation work in taking wounded men to and from theatres and concerts, and even transferring the men in wheel chairs for pleasure rides. The organization will carry on permanent peace activities to aid in emergency work in connection with the army and navy reconstruction program and in municipal and charitable activities.

Eighteen chapters are represented in the Motor Corps of the Atlantic Division, commanded by Dr. Dorothy C. Smyley.

"In some localities the activities are even greater at present than before the armistice," said Mr. Staub. "This is due to returning wounded, debarkation, and the proximity of hospitals. There are large opportunities in connection with civilian organizations. There are hospitals full of patients who would quite as much benefit by and be grateful for airings as our convalescent soldiers."

ECONOMICAL COAL CARRIER.

Motor Demand in Persia.
There is an increasing demand for low-priced motor cars in Persia, reports Francis White of the American Legation at Teheran. As few persons read English there, catalogues, he says, should be printed, if possible, in the French language.

Trucks Must Have Mirrors.
Motor trucks in New York State, with a capacity of one ton or more, must hereafter be equipped with mirrors so that the driver may have a view of the road behind him. This is made mandatory by the Booth bill, signed recently by Governor Smith.

THE SOLDIER AND HIS JOB

Government Has Mobilized Many Agencies to Make Sure They Will Get Together

By EDWARD L. BERNAYS.

EVERY man that the Government took into the ranks of the army or navy was taken out of civil employment.

Every man that the army or navy releases from war service the Government wants to see satisfactorily employed in his old job or in a better new job before it considers that man's discharge from war service complete.

Colonel Arthur Woods, Assistant to the Secretary of War, who is correlating and utilizing all agencies for the employment of ex-service men, has at his command 24,000 field representatives. They are stationed at re-employment centres throughout the country, helping in the specific work of the particular bureaus under their care and keeping the central management aware of local needs and local opportunities. There are men, too, who travel from post to post, with the purpose of expediting matters and further unifying the work. Not only are the ordinary employment channels of the United States Employment Service used; practically every Government department has added re-employment work to its ordinary duties. Secretary of the Interior Lane has placed 15,000 field representatives at the disposal of Colonel Woods. The Department of Agriculture has instructed its entire force to assist in the work of connecting the soldierless job with the jobless soldier.

Various Agencies at Work.

Every Red Cross employment bureau, every Salvation Army, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare Board, War Camp Community Service, Army and Navy Commission on Training Camp Activities, American Library Association, Governors of all States, Mayors of the principal cities, Department of the Interior, with 15,000 field representatives, Department of Agriculture, with 24,000 field representatives, Post Office Department, Labor Department, Navy Department, United States Chamber of Commerce, Chambers of Commerce of the principal cities, National Association of Manufacturers, Merchants' Associations, principal labor organizations, and a host of other established volunteer agencies are now working with and for the Government for the re-employment of ex-soldiers.

The first step taken toward giving employment to the ex-soldier is made before the man is dismissed from the service.

Booklets have been printed and are issued to the man while he is on board ship from France to America. This literature, issued by Colonel Woods's office, acquaints him with the economic situation that he will meet when he returns home. It tells him exactly how to go about getting a job. It points out the trades and professions which are open to him. Hundreds and hundreds of them, of all kinds. It removes all doubts a man may have as to his ability to begin life under favorable circumstances.

Each man is asked to fill an employment card. This questionnaire, far simpler than the one which took him from civil life, is designed to put him back into civil life without red tape.

Every card that is filled by returning men is immediately forwarded as a sort of preliminary application blank to the bureau, Red Cross, Knights of Columbus or any of the other volunteer agencies under Government supervision which is located in the part of the country in which the soldier lives.

Case of John Brown.

So that when John Brown, who describes himself as a resident of Chicago, age 26 years, with a previous training as a huckster, expresses a desire to become a machinist, his card is entered, and all efforts are made to get a choice of jobs for him upon his personal application at his nearest re-employment bureau.

If a man is indifferent to the sort of job he gets his re-employment bureau will send him to any number of them until he finds what he thinks he will like. Or it will let him talk to a trained vocational guide, who may be able to discover in him a vocational preference.

These bureaus may help the men in material ways. The soldier who decided to have a vacation of a few weeks on his $60 before starting to work may soon find himself without funds. The Salvation Army will see to it that he has food until his employment agency finds him a job. Or he may spend all his $60 on a suit of civilian clothes. He belongs to the Government until he has gone back to work. And the Government is waiting to be asked to help him.

Jobs to Fit.

A man may not like his old job. Colonel Woods's office will try to find a new job for him that he will like better. It can in certain cases help him to learn a new trade. It will place him out as a well-paid apprentice. Or it will show him how to learn new things—direct him to evening courses, or day courses, and give him work so that he can earn his keep while he is learning a new trade.

If a man finds that his old job does not want him the Government agent or the local employment agent looks into the matter, finds out what the trouble is, and settles it if possible. If he can't he goes about finding another job, at least as good, and as nearly like the old one in kind as possible.

And if a man doesn't like the first job he can have a try at others. The Government is doing it for the soldiers because the country wants to make the best use that it can of the 4,000,000 men who have, or should have, increased their earning capacity because of the training which they have undergone during the war.

The War Department, through Colonel Woods, is directing re-employment of ex-service men, because it is sound economics. And business interests are helping, because they know that it is distinctly to their advantage to make the best of the men who have come back. There is no shortage of work for workers. And employers and employes both want to have the round peg in the round hole.

MODERN TRADE SCOUTS

THE supercargo of today is a "comeback" upon the seas, but to a field of activities specialized and broadened so far beyond the duties of his forerunner of the olden days that, should one of those dignified old gentlemen see a supercargo of the United States Shipping Board in action, he would be dumb with astonishment.

The mere supervision of cargo is but one of the multitudinous duties of these modern trade scouts of the seas. They must have eyes for everything, from the depth of water and condition of the dock to the length of skirt affected by the belles of the boulevards; from the quality of bunker coal to the shade of face powder most adaptable to the complexion of the country.

The merchants and manufacturers of the United States who desire to enter the inviting field of foreign commerce must learn the essential lesson of exporting, not what they have to sell, but what the people of foreign countries want to buy, and reports of supercargoes will tell what these peoples want and what they need. That is part of their work in connection with observing and reporting on port and harbor facilities for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine.

The supercargoes are a selected body of men organized by the United States Shipping Board and put through a course of intensive training to fit them for the duties they are now performing on the ships under control of the board. It is expected that our merchant marine of the future will draw from this corps many of the executives who will be called upon to handle big shipping business and keep American commerce to the forefront among all the nations of the earth.

Already the supercargo is making his work felt as a necessary aid in promotion of reciprocal trade relations with other countries. When the Shipping Board finally determined upon the organization of the corps, a call was issued for young men of special qualifications to take up the work. The response was spontaneous. Seventeen thousand men, from 21 to 40 years of age, and representing every walk of business and professional life, offered their services. Out of these thousands, 350 men have been selected and trained in groups of fifty. They are now at work in the new field, and are lending invaluable aid.

Election Bets.

The Oklahoma Supreme Court, in the case of a Bryan County Sheriff, has held that betting on an election is a thoughtless act rather than a willful one. There are a good many of us who have often come to the same conclusion, after an election.—Muskogee (Okla.) Times-Democrat.

Manufacturing facilities greatly increased during the war, to meet the demands of the United States and allied governments for Selden Trucks, enable us to standardize production of this model to such an extent that we can sell the SELDEN SPECIAL at a price far below its value.

The SELDEN SPECIAL is a truck of the same rugged construction, possessed of the same gigantic powers of endurance, of the same design and built on the same sound engineering principles as the other models in the line of SELDEN HIGH QUALITY TRUCKS.

Under any hauling conditions, whether in the farming community, the traffic-jammed city streets, or in inter-city transportation service, the SELDEN SPECIAL will render HIGHLY EFFECTIVE, CONTINUOUS, ECONOMICAL and PROFITABLE SERVICE. The specifications of the SELDEN SPECIAL are proof of the high quality of the units which enter into the construction of this remarkable achievement in motor truck manufacture.

Ask us to send you specifications of the SELDEN SPECIAL—the truck that meets the needs of today for QUALITY CONSTRUCTION at MODERATE COST.

14,500 Miles to the Set of Tires

New National Average established by The FRANKLIN CAR

A nation-wide investigation among Franklin owners has just been completed. It covered all types of the present model in every part of the country, which have been driven day by day for over two years. The results show a delivery of over 14,500 miles to the complete set of tires.

Has Delivered More Than Claimed

When in 1916 the present chassis was put on the market, it was known that its lighter weight would give greater tire economy. Yet former figures of 10,000 miles were not changed in Franklin statements of performance, until owners' results were available. Franklin statements are based on facts, not on estimates.

It is Car Principle that Counts—Not Tires Only

This newly proved economy is just fresh evidence that even the best tires cannot compensate for bad principles of automobile construction. That to save tires, lightness of unsprung weight—weight below the springs—must, in the future, be the continual aim of car designers. That light total weight and flexible construction throughout the car are indispensable to low upkeep.

In the Lead for Seventeen Years

The Franklin Car has always led in economy because for seventeen years it has been continually perfected by the application of those principles which are the basis of economy. Today—the average running expense of its owners is indicated by the figures—

20 miles to the gallon of gasoline
14,500 miles to the set of tires
50% slower yearly depreciation

Y. M. C. A. IN THE BALKANS

Work With the Allied Armies from Gallipoli Through the Operations on the Saloniki Front

INTERESTING details with regard to the work of the Y. M. C. A. in the Balkans are contained in an article by Sir Arthur K. Yapp, K. B. E., in The Balkan Review. Sir Arthur begins with the operations around Gallipoli:

"Mudros, Imbros, and Tenedos," he says, "were the centres of importance for the ill-starred campaign in the peninsula, and the Red Triangle was at work in each island. They met a very real need, for at Imbros, owing to the difficulty of transport, our only source of supply at the end of 1915 was through a Greek who undertook to gather fruit and bake rolls of bread for the troops. Constant appeals were received at the London Headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. from commanding officers in Gallipoli, begging that something should be done to provide extras for men fighting in that very difficult country and trying climate. A liner was eventually found (taking briquettes to Greece) and stores valued at £16,000 were sent under the charge of Edgar Jones, M. P., (Merthyr,) which arrived at the islands in the closing days of 1915.

"In Mudros the troops were wild with delight when the goods arrived. 'For seven months we have had nothing decent to eat; can you wonder that we relish these delicacies?' some of them said in excuse for their ravenous appetites. Cakes, biscuits, chocolate, tinned fruits, meats, and salmon were now at their disposal, being sold at London prices. Even the officers appreciated those stores. An eyewitness wrote: 'I remember well a Brigadier General's shout when he discovered some bottled fruit, which he carried off to share with his brother officers.' Up to that time a tin of fruit could only be obtained from Greek vendors at the price of 12 shillings per tin.

"At Anzac Bay we had a tiny marquee, always under shell fire, and near by a big dugout measuring thirty feet by nineteen feet. One night a fragment of a Turkish shell weighing twelve and one-half pounds found its way as an unwelcome visitor into that dugout. At Cape Hellas we had three tiny tents fastened end to end; the centre tent had an 8-inch high-explosive shell from a Turkish gun, exploding and completely wrecking it. 'Fortunately, it did not damage the piano or the gramophone!' The latter had just been wound up and imperturbably continued its tune to the very end.

"The work of the Y. M. C. A. in the Saloniki area was commenced in the latter part of 1915. An idea of the growth of the organization in Saloniki is indicated by the fact that the monthly takings rose from £4,000 in 1916 to £45,000 in the Summer of 1917. The majority of our centres consisted of marquees, which were found most useful in advance positions owing to the constant changes that were taking place in the disposition of troops; but down at the base half a dozen of our principal centres were equipped with splendid huts.

"One of the worst conditions of the life of the troops out there was the terrible mental monotony that existed. Many camps were situated far away from towns and villages, and for long periods there was comparatively little military activity. When it was realized how depressing were these conditions, it was decided to introduce a comprehensive scheme for social and educational work. One man, who hadn't a friend in the world, even went so far as to correspond with himself, posting the letters in the ordinary way and receiving them again in due course.

In Sight of Olympus.

"Saloniki, the base, was not actually a Paradise, nor was 'Tommy,' on arrival from crowded troop ships, swift to fall in love with the place. The dirty, muddy city, with its irregular streets and clamorous populace, gave place, along the Monastir road, to a long seven miles of camps, where at every two hundred yards or so you would come across a guard posted at every store and orderly-room, cook-house, rubbish-hold, and dust-bin belonging to each of the dozen or so nations termed 'The Allies.' With diabolical ingenuity the guard would salute the weary troops who, every minute or two, had to march at attention, eyes right, &c., until simply disgusted with it all. Here in the sandy, dreary waste was a huge marquee with the Red Triangle, and that was a relief. Even the sight of Olympus standing head and shoulders above Ossa is poor sustenance to a soldier foot-weary and not too plentifully blessed with supplies. For long, owing to transport difficulties, we could only supply canvas tents—a thin protection when the temperature stands at zero, amid the worst malarial swamps in Europe. Workers had to tramp the long seven to nine miles along the Monastir road, night and morning, carrying their stores all this distance.

"The association suffered severely from the great fire in August, 1917, which almost destroyed the City of Saloniki. The Y. M. C. A. headquarters were completely destroyed, and damage to the stores was sustained to the extent of £12,000. Happily, however, a few days later five ships arrived from England, with large supplies on board, so that we were able to continue our work with scarcely the loss of a single day.

"Another interesting development took place in the Spring of 1918, when, at the request of the military authorities, the Y. M. C. A. commenced work in the Serbian camps. This work has grown very considerably following the recent advances into Serbia, and there are now Y. M. C. A. centres in Belgrade and in many of the principal Serbian towns. It is intended that this work should be made permanent, and the Y. M. C. A. is making a large contribution to the work of reconstruction in the land which has suffered so much through enemy occupation.

"Away up at the front the work had to be carried on under great difficulties before Bulgaria sued for peace. The approach to the camps was by tracks too narrow for any motor to travel. The Serbian women gallantly came to our aid. One of them, after only a week's experience in a Y. M. C. A. canteen, 'carried on,' single handed, at the rail-head where her countrymen were encamped. One sixty-foot marquee, and a bell-tent with a truck-load of stores, went up along with this woman, the eighty-mile journey by motor lorry. Serbian soldiers erected her marquee and fashioned tables and a counter out of packing cases. When our Secretary, Mr. Spoor, saw her a fortnight later, he found all in capital working order. Her takings were over £68 per day, she worked daily from 6:30 A. M. till 8 P. M., and often rose at night to supply hot tea, &c., to passing troops. She supplied free tea to wounded Serbs and French soldiers, and found time to teach English on three or four afternoons a week. Her only assistants were Serbian soldiers.

"The British Commander, General Milne, has expressed the highest admiration of the work which the association has done for the British troops. The relations with the military authorities have always been of the happiest character, and it would have been quite impossible for the association to have accomplished so much work without the whole-hearted co-operation of the officers. A considerable quantity of transport was provided and a large staff of orderlies was placed at our disposal, and in every possible way the military authorities assisted in our work. For example, when we opened a restaurant in Saloniki, the authorities procured the site, placed at our disposal a number of Royal Engineers, who cleared away incumbrances, and with the aid of Serbian carpenters enabled us within a fortnight to open a large restaurant, fully equipped and lighted with electricity. To enable us to supply about 2,000 meals a day, the authorities gave us a staff of eighteen soldiers, including six cooks. General Milne congratulated the association upon the efficiency of its personnel, and stated that in Saloniki, where Y. M. C. A. camp leaders were frequently placed in isolated camps at long distances from the base, and had to rely upon their own resources to a very great extent, it was imperative that they should be men of real initiative.

"During the great advance we were able, in three advanced positions, to provide free refreshments to the walking wounded, and one of our workers moved forward with the unit to which he was attached, and was thus able to provide tea and biscuits to every man who passed through the Field Ambulance. Extracts from the narrative of a worker will, perhaps, help the reader to realise the difficulties of terrain, and visualize the horrid aftermath of war. He had instructions from the Commander in Chief to go forward to Strumitza prospecting for Y. M. C. A. sites.

Going Into Serbia.

"'It was only six short days since the enemy had hastily left the gaunt hilltops of "535" and Grand Couronne. We ran down into Serbia with the lake (Doiran) in front of us and a queer medley of wires, trenches, notice-boards, and ragged camouflage screens at the roadside, not to speak of shell holes and sundry "dud" shells lying about. "Nobody is allowed to pass this board in daylight," read the notice; but a heedless stream of lorries, limbers, and what not stirred a continuous cloud of dust as they crowded the road. And now the barbed wire was of another pattern, and the dugouts faced the other way, and German marks were on the abandoned tools. Doiran was a city of the dead, with splendid minaret and collapsing church; warehouses were "looped and windowed raggedness," and dwellings shapeless mounds of mud and stones. Soon we wound northwestward up a broad valley seamed with the interlacing tracks used by the Bulgar transport; time and again we passed the broken carts and charred, derelict sheds, and repeatedly the word "diversion" scribbled on some plank warned the driver to swing vigorously left or right and dip the car through a bottom of sand or mud; for "Johnny" had carefully mined most of his bridges—and good, solid Teutonic structures they were. A number of papers fluttering along the ground proved on examination to be pages of scrupulously kept medical records concerning the admission, diagnosis, and other particulars of patients as far back as December, 1915. Cestovo lay before us, a scene of charred desolation. Stores of every description, sheds of ammunition, and parts of the permanent way had gone up in smoke and flame. At the roadside were smoking heaps of ashes, among which we could distinguish horses's ribs, showing that the cleaners-up had begun their task. Right across the Kosturino Pass the wreckage strewed the roadside without interruption. Country bullock-wagons had been tossed aside to clear the traffic, and the great black oxen sprawled, hideous with death and dust, beside them. Ambulances and gun carriages lay side by side with dead chickens (their legs tied together, as they are usually carried alive) and peasant's blankets and domestic furniture. The wind was scattering secret maps printed in Germany with the enemy position marked in red, while cinema films trailed across the ditch, dislodged from their cases.

"'The terrible effect of our airplanes' work was evident—steel helmets lay perforated with bullets from machine guns, twos and threes of mules and horses dead side by side and scarcely moved far enough to let traffic through. Rifles, bandoliers, blankets, greatcoats, caps, rags of destroyed uniforms, revealed a story of panic and despair. The dead bodies had been tied up in bundles of ten and buried.

"'In Strumitza, German notices were more blatant than ever, pointing out the Deutscher Magazin and other places. There was in many cases a Bulgarian translation, but not by any means always. The folk stood in the streets with white rags as flags hanging from their windows, and seemed not much concerned. A suggestion that a house might be obtained to convert into a Y. M. C. A. did not look exactly practicable, for the venturesome Y. M. man would as likely as not find a knife in his ribs and his daily takings distributed elsewhere. * * * Circumstances conspired to prevent any of the plans made that day for Y. M. C. A. centres from maturing, for plans and events have since followed with kaleidoscopic variety.'

"The association's field of work is now covering a wider area in the Balkans. The signing of the armistice made it necessary that we should considerably extend our sphere of operations. Bulgaria, Turkey and the whole of Serbia had to be included, and the association now has centres in Northern Bulgaria, and a party, consisting of men and equipment, has also been sent into South Russia.

"It is the intention of the Y. M. C. A. to remain with the armies as long as any need exists for the presence of the association, and its leaders feel that Serbia, which has suffered such terrible devastation, has a special claim to the benefits which the world has come to associate with the sign of the Red Triangle."

The A. & S. Summer Free Delivery

When you leave town for the Summer, the service of The Store Accommodating, upon which you depend so much in the Winter, follows you to your very door.

Over 300 Communities on Long Island

so promptly, that all goods purchased up to store-closing time, are on their way that night, and are delivered on the following day.

Amityville	Northport
Babylon	Patchogue
Bay Shore	Lynbrook
Glen Cove	Hempstead
Huntington	Lawrence
Islip	The Rockaways
Oyster Bay

To these stations, our huge motor trucks take the goods during the night, for transfer to the local routes and delivery early next day.

Our own automobiles also reach many towns in New Jersey and Westchester County, as well, of course, as Manhattan and the Bronx.

Our Mail Order Department assures prompt, individual attention to all orders or inquiries by letter, telegraph or telephone.

Customers living on Long Island have the additional advantage of being able to place their orders directly with our representatives, at many convenient points, who will see that they are promptly filled.

It will be easily seen, therefore, that

The Store Accommodating is as completely at your service, as though you were right in the city.

The Best Way to use Rouge

The specialist who created the wonderful La-may Face Powder has invented a new rouge. The rouge is inside the puff. All you do is to rub the puff on your face. It comes through the puff just as you need it. It goes on splendidly and stays on the face until you wash it off. The puff is in a dainty metal box. The box cannot break and the rouge will not crumble like the old-fashioned kind. This newly invented rouge is called La-may (French, Rouge L'Amé). It gives a beautiful color that looks natural under the strongest light. There are two colors—medium and dark. The fifty-cent package will last six months, yet the box is small enough to fit your purse. When you use this pure, harmless rouge and see how much more convenient it is and how much better it stays on, you will understand why thousands of women say it is the best they have ever used. Because La-may Rouge is so new, your dealer may not have it yet, but he can easily get it. Show this notice to your dealer and if he refuses to get you a package you may order by mail from Herbert Roystone, 16 E. 18th St., New York.

RIGHT HERE THEY NEED PROTECTION

Ever have this experience with your shoes?—After you've worn them a few weeks they start to crack right back of the toe, just where the natural bend in your foot comes.

It's because the leather's not protected from dirt and water. Ordinary shoe polishes may seem to clean the dirt off, but a real shoe dressing does more—it removes the dirt and provides a thin surface that prevents more dirt from penetrating the leather. Griffin Lotion Cream is a shoe dressing that cleans, softens, preserves and polishes the leather.

To the Wholesale Dress Buyer!

At the Paris Races!

Tomorrow
at Our New York Showrooms!

COMMENCING tomorrow morning our New York showrooms will present four distinctly individual dress models, conceived by us in our own designing rooms in Paris as part of our style contribution to the races at Long Champs, Paris, which reach their "grand climax" in Le Grande Prix.

It is here at this international fashion promenade that the great Parisian couturiers, according to custom, dictate to the world the mode that but a few minutes before was guarded with strictest privacy.

Here, as spectators, throng those style critics who seek to study the new silhouette; to adapt it for France and for the world.

This is the first time in the history of world-fashion that an American creator of dresses has dared to portray American interpretations of the Parisian silhouette with such accuracy, such foresight, such speed!

Viewed purely as a fashion education this display is well worthy of the attention of every retail store catering to an exclusive clientele.

What shrinks and stiffens blankets

The right way to wash them –

IT'S rubbing soap on blankets that shrinks and stiffens them. And using ordinary soap to wash them. That was the old way, and it was ruinous for woolens. When you rub or twist woolens, they become stiff, matted and shrunken.

With Lux there's no rubbing. Only sousing in the rich, pure lather, and gently pressing the suds through the soiled parts. Lux comes in delicate flakes, which dissolve instantly in hot water and whisk up into a wonderful lather. Lux is so pure, that it won't hurt anything that pure water alone won't injure.

Wash your blankets this year the Lux way! Have them like new again. Your grocer, druggist or department store has Lux. —Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

Directions

Use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to a gallon of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water, whisk into a thick lather, then add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Put the blankets in. Then squeeze the suds again and again through the soiled spots, but do not rub.

Rinse three times in water of the same temperature as that in which you washed the blankets, dissolving a little Lux in the last rinsing water Do not twist. Put through a loose wringer, or squeeze the water out. Dry in the shade in a moderate temperature.

There is nothing like Lux for washing woolens!

Pure, Clean, Cold Food — Low Ice Expense

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

1 The Bohn Syphon System keeps the cold, dry, pure air circulating rapidly, preventing mingling of odors and the settling of impurities upon the food. The drain is in front, instantly removable without disturbing the food, so it can be cleansed thoroughly every day. This means Health.

2 Lowest temperature of any refrigerator ever built, due to the Syphon System of rapid-air circulation and to the scientific construction, with "Flaxlinum" insulation in walls and doors. All dining cars (a severe test) use Bohn Syphons. This means Efficiency.

3 Lining of genuine porcelain fused into steel (a single piece in all but the very largest models). Look out for painted tin, called "porcelain-enamel," etc. The corners of the Bohn lining are round—no place for food particles to lodge. This means Cleanliness.

4 The Scientific Construction of the Bohn Syphon, famous throughout the world, makes it a great ice saver. Think what this will mean this Summer, with price of ice probably the highest ever known; then multiply your saving by the years you will use your Bohn Refrigerator. This means Economy.

Steel supersedes glass in the construction of this new vacuum bottle

ON motor trips—on picnics—in the home—vacuum bottles have won a permanent place. Piping hot coffee or ice-cold lemonade whenever you want it!

But how easily the ordinary glass-lined bottle breaks. Who has not broken one or seen one broken?

The invention of the Stanley Bottle puts an end to this trouble. After years of study and research an all-steel vacuum bottle has finally been perfected.

You can knock a Stanley Bottle off the table, drop it out of an automobile, or roll it down stairs without impairing its efficiency. You can cool it to fifty degrees below zero and then suddenly fill it with boiling water, without the slightest danger.

The Stanley Bottle is constructed of the highest quality rolled steel, lined with blue Amalite. It has no cracks, seams or crevices into which liquid can penetrate. There are no removable parts except the cork and cap.

The Amalite lining is a flexible material which is manufactured by an exclusive Stanley process. This substance is as sanitary as glass and as handsome as porcelain. It has a beautiful polished surface which does not break, chip, crack or tarnish.

The only guaranteed Vacuum Bottle

Over 40,000 Stanley Bottles are now in use. They have been tested in all climates under the most trying conditions. They are used by motorists, picnic parties, in the army and navy, by sportsmen, travelers and explorers, as well as for everyday service in the home.

The Stanley was the only vacuum bottle carried by both the American and English planes on the transatlantic flight.

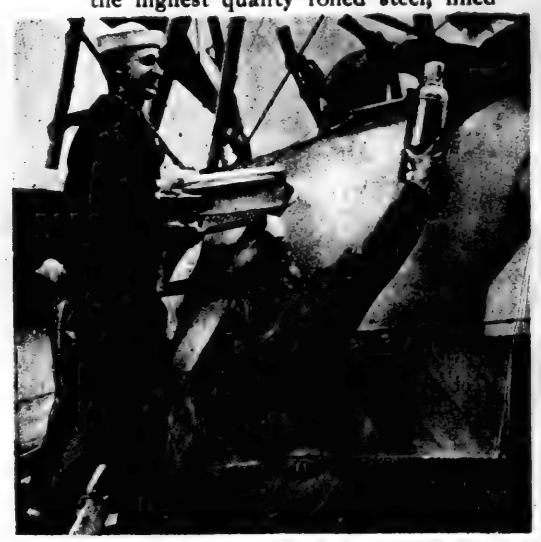
The initial cost of the Stanley is naturally higher than that of the ordinary vacuum bottle. But the Stanley has no cost of upkeep and no expense of glass fillers or repairs. The first cost is the last cost.

Stanley Bottles are made in one and two quart sizes, in nickel, rubber and leather finishes. They are guaranteed not only against breakage, but to maintain their high efficiency as temperature retainers. The Stanley is the only vacuum bottle made in two-quart size.

Get one to day for your vacation, take it motoring,—use it at home. A Stanley makes a splendid tennis or golf trophy, or an attractive graduation present.

Carried by the best department, drug, sporting, hardware, jewelry and automobile accessory stores.

Stanley Insulating Co., Great Barrington, Mass. New York Office: 43 Exchange Place.



Paul Thompson.

Abercrombie & Fitch Co. writes:

We are the original retailers of the Stanley Ferrostat in New York City. In the three years we have sold it not a bottle has been returned. It has given universal satisfaction and we unhesitatingly recommend it to our customers. Our sale is increasing constantly.

To dealers outside New York City

The Stanley Bottle means satisfied customers. It puts an end to the troubles and complaints due to broken glass fillers. If you have not secured this new vacuum bottle write to-day for detailed information to Stanley Insulating Company, 43 Exchange Place, New York City.

STANLEY

"IT WILL FERROSTAT NOT BREAK"

VACUUM BOTTLE

Take it on your camping trip. "Treat it Rough." It will always do anything you ask it to do. You can absolutely trust the Stanley, for it is made of steel.

Go on with the picnic. If the Stanley falls on a rock it will not fail you. Being a single unit of steel, it cannot break.

CRISIS NEAR IN MEXICO

Villa's Mysterious Seclusion Since 1916

ACCORDING to the best informed opinion in Washington, justice hangs over President Venustiano Carranza of Mexico. It is regarded as certain that he cannot longer stave off a settlement of the grievances which have been piling up in the United States and various European nations because of the high-handed treatment accorded to foreign interests in the Mexican Republic.

Either Carranza must come to terms with the United States and the Allies, with acceptable guarantees that Mexico will meet her obligations to these countries, or the revolutionists may shake him from power. In addition to the Villa rising there are not less than ten revolutionary movements in Mexico. All the others are small, but they represent many parts of Mexico, and are significant of gathering menace. Carranza is turning to the United States in the hope of escape from a fall. His son-in-law, General Candido Aguilar, arrived in Washington only a few days ago to try to explain away Carranza's recent course toward the United States and the Allies.

Need of funds presses Mexico closer and closer. Many Government employes are on part pay. The Villa group lures away Carranza's soldiers—more than 50,000 of them, it is estimated—by promises of loot. Mexico's debt, including guarantees and back interest, amounts to $362,933,782. No interest on it has been paid since 1913. A great part of the money is owed in the United States and allied countries. Government expenses have been met in part by the use of the receipts of the seized railroads and express companies. Bonds of these are largely held outside of Mexico.

The only way Carranza can get the money which his Government needs is by coming to an accounting. How much time he has to come to terms is the crucial question. As yet the Villa movement and other uprisings against him are not regarded as having reached an imminently dangerous stage. The Villa army would have to take Chihuahua and then Torreon before gaining a real advantage. The repulse of the Villa forces at Juarez last Sunday and Monday by American troops is taken at Washington to mean that the Administration will give Carranza another chance, though it is possible to regard the sally across the international boundary in the light merely of a strong hint to the forces of disorder that they must keep their domestic shooting-up parties inside their own corral, and not in the ardor of the game trespass on American ground or use Americans as targets.

There is no gainsaying that Carranza is in a tight place, with the League of Nations forming for economic pressure from without and a growing pressure from revolutionists from within.

While the crisis is approaching, one of the chief topics of discussion is the behavior of the bandit Villa. As in all Mexican crises of recent years, the advent of Villa suggests action and excitement. At this particular time, owing to his long absence from the limelight since Pershing's search for him, there is a considerable element of mystery connected with his doings. Although nobody in official Washington credits the often-recurring theory that Villa is dead, it is undeniable that he has vanished from the ken of American writers and photographers, and that he has ceased to be the object of the publicity which was formerly his delight.

There is still a question in some people's minds, regardless of official opinion and despite last week's dispatches stating that he was in command of the Juarez attack, whether the leader of the guerrilla army is really "Pancho" Villa himself or another leader operating in his name.

One of the May reports from El Paso read: "Villa forces occupied Guadelupe, a Mexican town opposite Fabens, Texas, thirty two miles east of El Paso, last night, according to information from Fabens today." Another said: "News of a serious battle between Villistas and Federal troops on May 6 at Corralitos, some distance south of Jimenez, on the main railroad line between Chihuahua City and Torreon, reached Washington today in advices from Mexico City." There was a lack of the personal element and the personal contact in all of these bits of news. And the most recent dispatches, in the last eight days, have said a great deal more about "Villistas" and "Villa troops" than about the man himself.

Many reasons are advanced by the skeptics to hold up the theory that Villa is dead. Not the least of them is the bandit's fondness for basking in the public eye. During the high fury of his escapades in former years there was no camp in Mexico where the newspaper correspondent was as welcome as in his. Stories about him, his life, his endeavors, his ambitions, and his conquests were as manna to his soul when he saw them in print. They were illustrated by numerous photographs. There was a period, indeed, in 1914 when an illustrated periodical was hardly considered complete without a story about or an interview with this romantic figure.

What has become of all the snapshots and interviews? Well, perhaps "Pancho" is really afraid of publicity at last.

One writer who was persona grata to Villa is John Reed. He incorporated his impressions of the bandit chief into a book. Reed asked him whether he did not aspire to become President of Mexico. He answered:

"I am a fighter, not a statesman."

How We Stopped the Leaks That Kept Us Poor

How Howard Lindsay and His Wife Discovered an Easy Way to Save One-Third of Their Income. A System That Applies to Any Income

By HARRISON OTIS

WHO should walk into the room but Howard Lindsay! Of all men perhaps he was the last I had expected to find as the president of this great new company. They had told me that Mr. Lindsay, of the Consolidated, was looking for a fine country home and was interested in buying the Dollard Place in Englewood; as an executor of the Dollard estate I had come to discuss the terms with him.

But Lindsay! Surely some miracle had happened. For it was the very man who had come to me "dead broke" about four years back and had asked me to help him get a new job.

"You are surprised, Mr. Otis, I can see that without you telling me. Let that real estate matter rest for a moment while I tell you how the miracle happened. It won't take five minutes. It all seems simple as A B C, as I look back on it now.

How It All Began

"Our new life began when we discovered how to save money. That happened soon after I started in the new job you helped me secure. And it all came about right in my own home. Our sole source of supply was my salary of $3,000. That first year we didn't save one cent. Besides that, we broke up on New Year's day to find a big bunch of unpaid bills to be taken care of somehow or other out of future salary checks.

"When I asked myself the reason for all this I found that I did not know the reason, and no more did my wife, because we hadn't the faintest idea what our money had been spent for.

"Then we looked around among our friends and learned a great lesson.

"The Weeds, I knew, were getting more than $5,000 a year. They lived in a modest apartment, did not wear fine clothes, seldom went to the theatre, did little entertaining, yet we knew they barely had enough money to pay current bills.

"In the case of the Wells, I found a very different story and one that set me thinking hard. Their income was $2,000 a year, yet, to my amazement, they confided to us that they had saved $600 a year ever since they were married. They didn't have any grand opera in their program except on their little Victrola but they did go to the theatre regularly, they wore good clothes, entertained their friends at their home and were about the happiest and most contented couple of all our married friends.

"The difference between these two families was that in one case the expenditures were made without any plan while in the other the income was regulated on a weekly budget system.

"We sat down that evening and made up a budget of all our expenses for the next fifty-two weeks. We discovered leaks galore. We found a hundred ways where little amounts could be saved.

"In one short month we had a 'strangle hold' on our expenses and knew just where we were going. In one year my wife proudly produced a bank book showing a tidy savings account of $800.

My New Grip on Business

"In the meantime an extraordinary change had come over me in business.

"I didn't fully realize this until the president called me in one day and said, 'Lindsay, you have been doing exceptionally well. I have been studying your work for the last year and you have saved the company a lot of money. We have decided to give you an interest in the business.

"So there you are. It is wonderful, isn't it? I often wish I might tell my story to the thousands of young married couples who are having the hardest time of their lives just when they ought to be having the best time."

So now I have the opportunity and you are lucky, if only you will act on the wonderful message this story contains.

The Helpful Budget Plan

The Ferrin Money Saving Account Book is built on the experience of Howard Lindsay. It is simplicity in itself. It contains 112 pages, size 8¼ x 10¾ inches, and is bound in half Blue Silk Cloth Back Cadet Blue Cover paper Sides turned edges, semi-flexible, stamped in gold on front cover. This book has been prepared by an expert and fits any salary from the smallest to the largest.

This unquestionable aid to money saving this watchdog of your income and expenditure properly kept will tell you to a penny where your money goes. It will keep absolute track of your expenditures. It will help to keep you out of debt. It will help to put money in the bank. It will help to provide, as nothing else can, a feeling of security, self-confidence and independence that comes only from the knowledge that you have a tidy and growing bank account.

The Ferrin Account Book provides for the income as well as the classified items of expense. It contains compact information on

Making Safe Investments.
Making a Budget.

Incorporated in it is a recapitulation for every month of the year which shows at a glance the Budget and the amounts paid out during the month for the various classified items of expense. It is the only book to the knowledge of its publishers which has a Budget column for every month.

The Ferrin Money Saving Account Book is a most practical gift to any newly married couple entering upon the business of domestic management and particularly under the present conditions.

A Few Minutes a Day

The Ferrin System takes only a few minutes a day. No knowledge of bookkeeping is required. Any grammar school boy or girl can keep the accounts in the Ferrin Book. This method is not a hard task. It is just fun.

Now you need not worry about the money you spend by the Ferrin Plan for clothes, food, rent or the theatre, because you will know how much you can afford to spend.

Send No Money

See how satisfactory the Ferrin Book System works, no matter how much or how little your income. We know what you will think of it when you see it. So we are willing to send you the book without your sending us any money in advance. Just mail the coupon, and back will come the book by return mail. When you have seen what big returns the Ferrin System will pay you, send us only $2. If you feel that you can afford not to have it, return the book and owe us nothing. Act now, for the sake of your bank account and your future.

Gentlemen:

I consider your system a most valuable contribution to the people of this country at this time.

In our company we have 3000 employees and it was a revelation to me in giving them advice in regard to the making out of their income tax returns to find how few had any intelligent idea of their income and their living expenses.

The simplicity of your plan, which by comparison with previous methods of account keeping would seem to be well nigh automatic, appeals to me strongly.

I do not say you can't teach an old dog new tricks, but I will say to you that I am going to use the Ferrin Book for my own family expenses and consider it will make money for me right from the start.

Respectfully yours,

Louvain Without a Library

Three Thousand Students Are Back at the War-Ruined Belgian University, But Books and Manuscripts Burned by Germans Cannot Be Replaced

By NEIL VAN AKEN.

DURING the more than four years of the European war it was practically impossible for outsiders to estimate the damage done to Louvain University. Those of us who happened to be in Louvain on that sad and unforgettable 25th day of August, 1914, and who from a safe distance watched the flames of the burning city leap high into the skies and illumine Mont Cesare—which like a stage background changed into various shades of color as the fires burst out anew or died down—considered it the part of prudence to be very chary of questions that might have been answered by the butt of a Mauser or by a military court-martial. The lives and property of too many thousands of innocent Belgians had lain in the discretion of such courts.

All we saw then was that our glorious Alma Mater was being ruined. We hoped against hope during the first hours of the conflagration that the famous "Halles" might be spared. We had trust in its thick stone walls. We knew that if the fire was in the north side of Rue de Namur it would not be difficult to prevent it from leaping across the street, although at this spot Rue de Namur is not more than 40 feet wide. We hoped the same for Rue des Cordes on the west and Rue Kracken on the east. On the south there seemed no possible danger as the building on that side was bordered by the Place du Vieux-Marche, a market-place more than 100 feet wide, running parallel with Rue de Namur. All this, of course, assuming that the municipal fire fighting system, although somewhat antiquated, was in working order, which it had no reason not to be at that time of the year. Our hope proved vain. On the morning of Aug. 26 the whole block, "Halles" and library, was a smoking mass of ruins.

We know now that all efforts to save the ancient structure with its wealth of precious volumes had been deliberately frustrated by the Germans. The water system had been crippled. Those who had ventured near the burning building to save what they could of its treasures had been forcibly removed by the agents of German Kultur—which proved, in the words of a recent chronicler, that these modern vandals could not only create libraries, but destroy them with equal thoroughness. I have at this writing not seen an itemized bill of damages assessed against the Germans, and I wonder what amount of it has been or will be allotted toward the upbuilding of Louvain's famous library and university. All the stored gold of Germany cannot pay for the scientific value of the rare documents, the thousands of manuscripts, and incunabula which were the priceless heritage of four centuries and are now lost to us forever.

Generous efforts of America to rebuild Louvain's university and to restock its library, soon to be given an added impetus by the visit to America of Belgium's great Cardinal Mercier, are a source of gratification to all patrons of education. But in the words of Moreau (La Bibliotheque de l'Universite de Louvain):

"Who will give her back—and I do not speak here of the manuscripts, the incunabula, the archives—her academic collection, the complete works of her renowned teachers often annotated by them in their own hand-writing, the scientific essays of her humanists, her philosophers, her theologians, her jurists, her physicians, her mathematicians, her astronomers, who during centuries were the very brains of the 'Pays de par deca'? Who will restore her 'Unica,' her 'Rarissima,' which she possessed in such great numbers? Who will give her those in folio on mathematics, on ancient medicine, on theology, on canon law, on history, on patrology, gathered mostly by the science and the zeal of her librarians and the generosity of her benefactors?"

"Who will give her back those editions of the classics before which their authors, the poets, the tragedians, the historians, the orators of Athens and Rome, would, I imagine, have been proud to pass in review? That library of Louvain, was it not, so to speak, the history of the university itself, the history of the rôle played by Louvain in the movement of the renaissance, in the discoveries of the most scientific centuries of the Christian era, in the manifestations of religious life since the great upheaval of the sixteenth century?"

What a magnet that library was to the intellectual giants of the world! Often as we walked the narrow streets of this monumental, mediaeval city going to our lectures in the Institut Mercier, where in the late nineties the present Grand Cardinal of Belgium taught us the depths of scholastic philosophy, or emerging from the "Juste Lipse," so named after Louvain's famous savant of the sixteenth century, we would meet a venerable, bent figure with classical features, or an alert but pensive foreigner of scientific demeanor, and upon scanning the visitor's book in the library, find that we had been face to face with a world authority from the Sorbonne or Heidelberg in search of documents that might elucidate an Egyptian discovery, or an internationally renowned scholar from Oxford or Yale or Salamanca or Athens quietly unearthing our library's hidden treasures for confirmation of a scientific theory.

Louvain would not change its slow, phlegmatic mode of living because of their presence, nor give receptions in their honor. Louvain was used to the visits of the world's biggest and most famous figures. They left as they had come, quietly, unostentatiously, the richer for their stay of a week or a month, thanking a kind Providence for having gathered in one place the cream of the knowledge, the science, and progress of the world. These men Louvain will not see again. She will miss them because there will be no reason for their coming. The torch of "Wissenschaftliebend," Germany, has reduced Louvain to the level of an insignificant college town of a far-away Arkansas county. All that remains of her 950 ancient and priceless manuscripts, of her more than 1,000 incunabula, precious documents in print over 400 years old, of her archives and records telling of the history of nearly 500 years of scientific progress, a history of the world itself and its attainments: all that remains of this are four ugly looking, charred walls and a prosaic heap of ashes which the winds sweeping through the ruins are slowly scattering to the four points of the compass.

And although two months ago, when last I visited my Alma Mater, the number of her students counted more than 3,000, more than half of whom were still wearing the uniform of the Belgian or French Army, Louvain can never again become the Louvain of pre-war fame and glory. It was sad, sad to the point of tears, to stand on the corner of the old market place that holds that magnificent piece of "Brussels lace," Louvain's Hotel de Ville, and see the procession of students pour out of old Rue de Namur, and as they passed the ruins of her library cast a sombre glance at the blackened remains of what once was their pride and joy. There used to be in days gone by processions of hilarious youngsters with grotesque student caps over their ears, singing and shouting, romping and scuffling, teasing the pretty shop girl over the half-door of Mme. Durand's epicerie or indulging in innocent pranks on a peddler's donkey at the corner. But not today. The barbarians have cut a slice out of their very hearts; they are a sad, serious, sombre procession of down-hearted boys.

Perhaps the most inadequate definition of a library, although etymologically correct, is a collection of books in a building, and as such many of us are apt to think of Louvain's library. Libraries, like a butcher's shop or a hardware store, have become commercialized. They are intended in most instances to fetch, not education, but information by the vanload. A community, to be a part in the general procession of advancement and educational progress, votes to establish a library. Libraries nowadays may be had much like club luncheons on the dining car. A No. 1 collection of books from a general publisher's catalog may be had, say, for $10,000. In it you will find a sprinkling of everything worth knowing under the sun, from translations of Homer's "Odyssey" to a collection of O. Henry, with a preponderance of the latter kind. A No. 2 collection slightly less voluminous may be had, say, for $5,000. Still a third, for smaller communities, is for sale for $2,000. Take your choice.

Often, when I speak among my friends of the destruction of Louvain's library in a tone of sadness, they slap me on the back and cheer me with the assurance that America prints millions of books a year and that, while it was mean and barbarous of the Germans, and all that, to deliberately burn an innocent library, it will only be a matter of a year or so and Louvain will have a bigger library than ever, if she insists on it. We may find consolation in the fact that the restoration of Louvain's university and the rebuilding of its library was not left to the well-meaning and overgenerous enterprise of individual sympathisers, but, instead, counts among its promoters ex-President Taft, President Butler of Columbia, and others whose names insure an effort toward a collection worthy to succeed to the name of Louvain Library.

For a proper understanding of Louvain's grief at the loss of her library a short history of its struggles and glory is necessary. Although Louvain University had been established in 1425, it had no library of its own until 1636. That can easily be explained when we consider the scarcity of all printed books and, a fortiori, of all manuscripts for sale on the open market. There were those who with Erycius Puteanus (1639) ascribed the fact in a flattering sense to the colossal erudition of the then university professors, who, if we must believe their adulators, were walking founts of education, perambulating or circulating libraries, so to speak. At any rate, not until 1627 did Louvain get her first collection of books, the donor being Laurent Beyerlinck, whose donation of 862 volumes was shortly after followed by the munificent gift of 906 books by Jacques Romain. After that came Cornelius Jansen (1638), Peter Stockman (1650), Jacques Boonen (1655), Archbishop of Malines, and Valere Andre (1655), who became Louvain's first librarian.

There was more generosity in these offers of rare volumes—many of them being manuscripts—than we can realise in this day of book factories and printing plants, not merely because they were scarce, but also because Louvain had at that time no hall in which these books could conveniently be stored and be kept from the profanating touch of the uninitiated. This is illustrated in an episode related by Morean, quoted above, in which is also brought out the carelessness of Louvain's first librarians. Gaspar Magermans, librarian of Louvain University, visited upon a certain occasion Canon Dominick Snellaert (1720), who had a magnificent library, for those days at least. Magermans had his eye on that library. He asked Snellaert to bequeath it upon his demise to the university. "What," said Snellaert, "leave you my books? May God protect me from being so foolish! To think that, after my death, my precious companions will be scattered and, with my name in them, found in the doorway and the windows of the pawnbrokers! It would not be the first volume I have seen there! And some very rare ones besides! And some of them belonged to illustrious masters! No, no! But, if you built a separate hall for the collection, I might think it over."

And so the hall was built, the hall which was to gain fame for Louvain as holding the most precious collection of books in existence. From the best available sources an estimate placing the number of printed volumes in the Library of Louvain on the morning of Aug. 25, 1914, at 270,000 is conservative.

It has been suggested that the Germans might, perhaps, have carted a great portion of the library's volumes away for use in their much vaunted seats of learning. But it can be positively stated that not a single volume was taken by them. They merely wished to destroy. They succeeded to their heart's content. The work of destruction was too precipitate to even save all their own property. On the morning of Aug. 26, when the citizens of Louvain appraised the havoc wrought, they found among the smoldering embers the carcass of an old artillery horse which, together with a score of others, had a few days previously been installed in the monumental structure of the "Halles." The poor animal had not been worth the saving; all the others had been led to safety.

The famous "Halles" of the Mediaeval Guilds had been used as a stable.

Summertime School Plans in the City

Co-operation of Many Agencies for Keeping the Children Healthier and Happier Through the Vacation Period

EVERY mother of a family whose means do not allow of a vacation in the country dreads the approach of Summer, for the question always is, "What shall we do with the children?" School closes and the streets, with their teeming traffic and nondescript companions, open up for the demoralization of the boys and girls. When the war opened the Federation for Child Study realized that that ever-present situation had been made more acute by the absence of fathers at the front or the engagement of mothers in war work at home, and the result of study and experiment has been the establishment of the Play School, which contemplates the all-day care of groups of children under conditions calculated to promote their physical, intellectual and civic development.

More than that, (for the term "Play School" is something of a misnomer,) it does what has never been done adequately before. It brings to bear upon the day-by-day problems all the agencies of the community that have anything to contribute. The public agencies of which the average child has never heard, and the average child's average mother has never chosen to utilize, are brought to the child. The Department of Health, public libraries, public dispensaries and clinics, public hospitals, Department of Public Charities, and the public baths, are made a living factor in the community life. And the private agencies, which are even less well known, are brought into play. And so, in New York last year, the Play School children received the benefit of the activities of the Academy of Medicine, the People's Music League, People's University Extension Society, Educational Dramatic League, Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, Red Cross, Woman's City Club, various hospitals and clinics, the Society for Ethical Culture, and the Child Welfare Exhibit Committee. And, finally, individuals and commercial agencies have been brought into co-operation, and have become civic factors to a degree which they never would have attained had it not been for the Play School acting as a central distributing centre.

The federation first had its attention drawn to the necessity of taking care of the child during the Summer through a realization of the scientific fact that the average child loses weight during the Summer and that the vacation, which is ordinarily supposed to be of such great benefit to him, leaves him actually weaker than he was at the close of school. It became evident that when thrown upon his own resources and allowed to live in irregular life in the city streets his phisique suffered. Healthful instructive play seemed to be the remedy.

Steps through which were evolved the co-ordinated organs which will function in seven centres during the coming Summer were taken one at a time, but as it now stands the plan seems simple and informed by common sense—a plan which can be adapted to conditions in any city where the people live in congested quarters and the mothers are at a loss as to what to do with the children. In New York the schools will be conducted at Hudson Guild, Madison House, Greenwich House, Hamilton House, Stuyvesant House, Emanuel Sisterhood, and the Ethical Culture School. They will be under the direction of Dr. Benjamin C. Gruenberg, who is head of the department of biology at Julia Richman High School.

The guiding principle in the building up of the schools has been that of following through the whole day of the child's normal life, and making it healthier, happier, and more productive of permanent mental improvement. Of fundamental importance has been health protection, and therefore the plans include suitable feeding, medical supervision, bathing, individual guidance and adjustment in health matters and health education, thus extending the influence of the school into the home. Then there has been the necessity of providing opportunities for work and play, work and play that are graded, pleasurable, interesting, and directed. More than that, they must be purposeful and productive, and not mere gestures to pass away the time. And finally the life of the child requires training in social adjustment. Children must learn to live with others, to share, to co-operate, to be considerate, to feel what concerns others and what concerns them as members of the group.

In other words, the children have every opportunity to do the things which they would ordinarily do if left to their own devices, but in the play school they are led by sympathetic suggestion to do them in the right way and for the greatest good of themselves and society. For instance, the children must eat, and in many cases the poor are notoriously extravagant eaters in that, through ignorance or race customs, they do not give any attention to proper apportionment of food values. This is where the public doctors, nurses, dietitians, and the community kitchen begin to be useful.

Summer Play School—The Shoe-making Class. Jessie T. Beals.

The children get their lunches at the nominal price of 5 cents a day and receive the essential 1,000 calories in the form of nutritious soup, bread, butter, and dessert. They may call for more, for there is no limitation upon quantity, and, incidentally, this privilege does away with the "grabbing" which on the opening day of school is a striking and pitiable feature of the lunch period.

Americanization is the keyword in the lunchroom, as it is in all other phases of the work. The various nationalities have their peculiar dietaries, and through inertia and ignorance find it difficult to know what to do when the exigencies of war and after-war conditions deprive them of certain articles and make substitutes necessary. The Italian, of course, loves his oil and spaghetti, but during the war, and even now, they have risen in price beyond the reach of the slender pocketbook of the laborer with a numerous family. Meanwhile the mother finds that her child is thriving on the food of the play school. He is gaining weight, he feels better, and he looks happier. She may wonder for a while, but presently she receives an invitation to inspect the school and see what he is eating, to learn how it is cooked, and the way it is served.

Other nationalities have similar experiences, so they all approach the norm of the American table. To overcome the deficiencies of the tenement kitchen or the drawbacks of the "broken family," in which the mother may leave for work before the children are ready for breakfast, the school kitchen sells cooked foods which need only to be warmed to be ready for the table. For 4 cents the child may take home a pint jar of cooked oatmeal, so that when morning comes he is assured of a breakfast, both nutritious and wholesome.

Next to the problem of feeding the children the parents find that of clothing them the most insistent, and yet their extravagance consists often only in their ignorance. When shoes become worn, presumably the only thing to do with them is to send them to the shoemaker's, but in the play schools the children have their natural tendencies to cut things up and to hammer on the nearest object within reach, directed toward the mending of their own shoes, and this at the minimum cost.

For the girls the dress problem has been simplified to the point where a 12-year-old girl can make for herself a presentable dress, one that will look "American," for $1.50. And when the girls make dresses for themselves they are truly at play, for it is with the keenest delight that they bedeck themselves.

Of play proper there is an abundance. Upstairs in the gymnasium they play games of the street, but with every effort being made by the teachers, who play with them, to instill the idea of fair play and general sportsmanship. Again, true Americanism is the keynote. The roughs of the neighborhood are there, but the edges are worn off. The girls have danced in the street, but in the play school they are taught grace and rhythm, which they are quick to absorb.

Toward the middle of the afternoon the youngsters get tired. That is the time for them to take their naps, so down they must lie on their cots, to sleep if they can, but at least to close their eyes. When they get up there are crackers and milk, some light activities, and then the children return to their homes, bringing to their parents the spirit of American humanity and the ways of decent and wholesome living.

Crisis Near in Mexico—Carranza in a Tight Place

am not educated enough to be President. I only learned to read and write two years ago. How could I, who never went to school, hope to be able to talk with the foreign Ambassadors and the cultivated gentlemen of the Congress? It would be bad for Mexico if an uneducated man were to be President. There is one thing I will not do—and that is to take a position for which I am not fitted. There is only one order of my Jefe (Carranza) which I would refuse to obey—if he would command me to be President or a Governor.'

"On behalf of my paper," Reed goes on, "I had to ask him this question five or six times. Finally he became exasperated. 'I have told you many times,' he said, 'that there is no possibility of my becoming President of Mexico. Are the newspapers trying to make trouble between me and my Jefe? This is the last time that I will answer that question. The next correspondent that asks me I will have him spanked and sent to the border.' For days afterward he went around grumbling humorously about the chatito (pugnose) who kept asking him whether he wanted to be President of Mexico. The idea seemed to amuse him. Whenever I went to see him after that, he used to say, at the end of our talk, 'Well, aren't you going to ask me today whether I want to be President?'

"He never referred to Carranza except as 'my Jefe,' and he obeyed implicity the slightest order from 'the First Chief of the Revolution.' His loyalty to Carranza was perfectly obstinate. He seemed to think that in Carranza were embodied the entire ideals of the revolution. This, in spite of the fact that many of his advisers tried to make him see that Carranza was essentially an aristocrat and a reformer, and that the people were fighting for more than reform."

The extracts are quoted to show the familiarity and the openness of mind with which Villa talked to the newspaper men gathered around him. But today one hears of no meetings between Villa and American writers.

His fondness for having his picture taken was well known. The files of any of the papers and magazines, beginning with 1913 and going through 1916, show pictures, more pictures, and still more pictures of the Mexican. There he is—Villa on horseback, Villa and his fighting cock, Villa on a cattle car, Villa as a cowboy, Villa and his wife, and in scores of other poses too numerous to mention. Yet in the last year, as far as is known, the newspapers of the United States have received no new pictures of him. A logical conclusion would seem to be that his likeness is no longer to be had, because he is not alive. To verify the fact of this lack of the existence of recent pictures of him, a letter was sent to the man purported to be Villa's publicity agent. On May 21, there had been a Dallas dispatch, dated May 30, reading as follows:

"Villa has transferred his publicity head quarters from El Paso to Dallas, with Colonel Dario Silva, his former Military Secretary, in charge. Villa's plan, according to Silva, is to unite the revolting factions of Mexico, many of whom have lost their leaders, under the leadership of General Angeles, conduct a military campaign with smuggled and captured arms and munitions, and cultivate the friendship of the United States."

When a letter was sent to Colonel Silva asking him for the latest picture of Villa and the plate on which it was taken he replied:

"Beg to state that I have not seen any of General Villa's photographs for at least a year, therefore I regret my inability to serve you at this time."

The signature "Dario W. Silva" was typed.

There have been various reports of the death of the leader of the peons. In the Spring of 1916 it seemed as if the matter had been settled for all time. A dispatch from Mexico City, dated April 16, was to the effect that Villa's body had been dug up out of a two weeks' grave by Carlos Carranza, nephew of General Carranza. According to the information given out at the time, Villa had died after an operation performed upon one of his legs, which had been shattered by a bullet in the fight around the Guerrero district in the State of Chihuahua. Shortly afterward, however, he was reported on the rampage again. On Nov. 18, 1917, appeared a news item as follows:

"Camp fires thought to be those of Villa bands can be seen tonight west, south, and east from here. During the day, scouts reported a strong force of Villa men, under command of Martin Lopez, at Gaudalupe, thirty miles east. Another force was located at Rancheria, twelve miles west and close to the New Mexico line. Precaution is being taken against a surprise attack."

Francisco Villa.

When United States troops went into Mexico to capture Villa, dead or alive, the correspondents, in anticipation of his death, sent out dispatches giving the salient factors in the life of the Mexican. There was one paragraph which has a special bearing on the present situation. It runs as follows:

"By some, he [Villa] was accounted a military genius in the days of his successes, but by many credit for the strategy and tactics displayed in his campaigns is given to General Felipe Angeles, a soldier trained at Chapultepec and St. Cyr." It is now suggested by those who think Villa is dead that the men in his band, appreciating the mental superiority of Angeles, have aligned themselves with the former, but have retained the name Villistas as a symbol of their origin and a mark of their strength. There is no doubting the fact that the ruse, if it is a ruse, has succeeded in its intent among the Mexicans as well as among the Americans.

Emeterio de la Garza, Jr., a Mexican publicist who recently returned to the United States after a visit to Mexico, is firm in his belief that Villa is still alive.

"Villa," he said in New York the other day, "is not human. He is a tiger. Like a tiger or a cat, he has seven lives. You here in America say it is nine lives. It must be so. Villa has more lives than any living creature in Mexico. In speaking about appearances and disappearances, it must be remembered that Villa, though a leader of an army, is not a leader of a trained army. His men are practiced in the art of guerrilla warfare. They know nothing of scientific warfare. Therein lies his power to fade out of the public eye for months at a time. He appears, strikes, disappears. His art is like that of the submarine, working under cover of darkness all the time and losing itself in the expanses of the sea, or, as it happens with him, in the caves in the mountains. It doesn't take much to raid a city or a town. A few men, a few kegs of dynamite, a few bombs—and the trick is done. In a short time the city is alarmed, the bandits rush through, taking what they want and then go off into their strongholds.

"He is a romantic figure, is this man. Mexico knows him well. Villa can march a hundred miles without stopping. Villa can kill a hundred men without remorse. Villa can live a hundred days without food. Villa can go a hundred nights without sleep. Villa, in short, can do a hundred things which other men cannot do.

"His silence for so many months? How do I explain that? I do not explain it. It's just another manifestation of the uniqueness of the man. It was his pleasure to remain hidden in the strongholds in the mountains. Maybe he was gathering men. Maybe he was gathering ammunition. Maybe he was learning scientific attack. The fight with the Americans showed him how much he needed to learn in the way of putting up a defensive line. Villa didn't fight the Americans. He ran. To him running is no disgrace. It's part of guerrilla warfare. Raid, murder, pillage and run—that is his formula. Today he comes to light again with a new army commanded by General Angeles. It may be that Villa has learned a lesson in military tactics from this man. I do not know. Only, I believe, he is alive and leading his men.

"What he is doing means nothing to Mexico in the way of a social upheaval. It is unfortunate that some of the northern towns have to suffer at the hands of his armies, but the Government of Mexico is not worried about him. They will get him eventually, or else he will see that he can't win out and run back to his mountains. I feel sorry for General Angeles, however. Villa allows no man to be his superior. Before very long, mark my words, you will hear of General Angeles having been killed. Villa is a genius of destruction and spares no one."

What is the answer? Is the bandit chief alive, as is definitely asserted at Washington and on the border? And if he is, what was he doing in the many months between Pershing's search and the present raiding season?

Women as "Permanent Peacemakers"

to lift the blockade and to organize the resources of the world for the relief of the people from famine and pestilence." In reply, President Wilson telegraphed Miss Addams: "Your message appeals both to my head and heart, and I hope most surely that means may be found, though the present outlook is exceedingly unpromising because of unfortunate practical difficulties."

Then the conference set for itself the task of working out a constructive piece of criticism of the League of Nations covenant. There was gradually developing a radical and a conservative wing whose views had to be compromised if the covenant was not to be denounced entirely. Most of the Dutch, the Scandinavians, the Swiss, and the Americans were conservatives. Many of the English and naturally the women from Central Europe occupied the extreme Socialist, if not Communist, left. The Americans, headed by Jane Addams, possibly influenced by President Wilson's position, saw defects in the League's constitution, but wished it preserved and amended as a basis for world democracy. As finally passed and taken to Paris by Miss Addams and Mme. Duchesne of France, the League resolution indorsed the principle underlying a society of nations, but asked for certain amendments, including the admission of all nations on equal terms, worldwide reduction of armaments, and easy amendment to the covenant. Finally, last but not least, the congress provided for a permanent women's bureau to be established at Geneva, the seat of the League of Nations, with Emily Balch of the United States as permanent Secretary.

Probably the resolutions passed will prove but "scraps of paper." Yet American women return home with the knowledge that women the world over are becoming politically minded both nationally and internationally.

Art Glories of Saint Sophia

Sealed Beauties of Famous Mosque at Constantinople May Be Revealed When Sultan's Capital Passes Into Other Hands

Sancta Sophia is the most interesting building on the world's surface. Like Karnak in Egypt, or the Athenian Parthenon, it is one of the four great pinnacles of architecture, but unlike them it is no ruin, nor does it belong to a past world of constructive ideas, although it precedes by seven hundred years the fourth culmination of the building art in Chartres, Amiens, or Bourges, and that must ever stand as the supreme monument of the Christian epoch.—From the Church of Sancta Sophia, Constantinople: A Study of Byzantine Building, by W. R. Lethaby and Harold Swainson.

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD

IT is the belief of scholars that the cisterns of the mosque of St. Sophia and those of the Sultan's library at Constantinople hold many of the lost treasures of Greek literature. It is a certainty, however, that a few days' work in the interior of the mosque would reveal the most wonderful treasure of Byzantine art that the world has ever known. For records show, some of them made within the memory of living men, that behind the sealed windows of the mosque, behind the white-washed, vaulted roofs and domes, behind the matted walls, where are now suspended here and there huge disks on which are written in Arabic characters the names of Moslem worthies, Abu-Bekr, Osman, Ali, Omar, and the like, are concealed in a good state of preservation the finest specimens of art ever produced in glass, mosaic, and pigment, wrought in portraits and ornamentation by Byzantine artists.

Once, after their concealment of nearly 900 years, which followed their display of light, color, and glory of a thousand, the veil was lifted and copies of some of them made. This was sixty years ago when the Sultan Abd-ul-Mejid hired the Italian architect Fossati to put the mosque in a full state of repair. In the course of his work he exposed the entire interior, and then, having made colored facsimiles of some of the things he saw, carefully sealed it up again. By the courtesy of the Columbia University Library I have been permitted to photograph some lithographic copies of Fossati's colored reproductions found in a folio printed by the German Salzenberg.

In the first place, the Turk, not being a builder, found it convenient to preserve the buildings of the people whom he conquered and to adapt them to his own use with as little expense and effort as possible. The Christian edifice, with its religious emblems covered or obliterated and a minaret or two erected near the portal (symbols peculiar to Islam as they are in primitive form to the aboriginal religion of the Alaskans) readily became a mosque. Moreover, it is said to be the teaching of Islam, whether through the Koran or not, that True Believers must never destroy the face of a picture or statue of man nor attempt to reproduce it as it is the face of God, nor may any writings be destroyed, because the Word of God may be concealed therein.

"St. Sophia" is really a misnomer, for the phrase as applied to the church or mosque in question has nothing to do with any saint. Half Latinized as Sancta Sophia, it comes from the Greek phrase "Hagia Sophia," meaning Holy Wisdom. The edifice was erected by Justinian the Great on the site of two earlier churches bearing the same name. The architects were Anthemius of Tralles and his nephew, Isadorus of Miletus. It was founded in 532 and dedicated on Christmas Day 538. Twenty years after the first dedication the dome fell on account of an earthquake, and in the immediate restoration which took place the dome was raised twenty-five feet higher. Various repairs were later made under Basil I., Basil II., Andronicus III., and Cantacuzene, and finally, under Turkish auspices, as has already been said, by Fossati in 1847-48. Aside from changing the appearance of the interior, the Turks, when they took possession in 1453, erected a minaret at each of the four exterior angles of the building.

The problem the architects had to solve was how to carry a dome 107 feet in diameter and forty-six feet deep on four major arches. At the east and west ends are immense arched apses, the full width of the dome, which are again subdivided into three smaller arched apses. The north and south arches are filled with lofty columns carrying arches opening into the aisle on the ground floor and a gallery on the upper, the walls above being pierced with windows of immense size. "A Health Examination That Added Ten Years To My Life"

"I GUESS I am what you would call the average man. Forty years old—earning a pretty good salary—a wife and two children. And I do want to live to be seventy, anyway.

"I haven't been sick in bed for fifteen or twenty years, so you see I'm not a health fanatic. I've been so busy making a living that I haven't given much thought to my health. If I felt good one day and bad the next, I sort of accepted it as a matter of course. Sometimes I might have wondered why I should have a headache, or why I couldn't work as hard or with as much enthusiasm as in the old days, but by that time the headache had vanished and I forgot all about it until the next time.

"But about a year ago a friend of mine, a fine, generous-hearted fellow, and a famous athlete in his day, caught cold somehow—pneumonia developed—there was a weakness of the heart or something—and in four days he was gone.

"I tell you it set me thinking. Here was a man who thought he was in good health—who hadn't been sick within my recollection—and yet whose system had become so weakened through the strain of hard work and advancing years that he had nothing in reserve when the crisis came.

The Good Ship Health

"I TALKED to the family physician and he told me that was just like the breaking up of a ship when it hit the rocks. Nothing could save it then. But with the proper care all along the voyage, those hidden dangers would have been mapped and charted—known and understood—and therefore easily avoided.

"The physician said further that he came across similar cases every day in his practice and that the mortality among middle-aged men and women in the United States is increasing in a way that is really alarming.

"Last year, for instance, more than 100,000 men and women between the ages of 40 and 60 died in the United States from diseases of the heart, circulation and kidneys. And the crime of it is that many of these deaths could have been prevented had the people realized the danger before it was too late to do anything but send out distress signals. It is safe to say that two out of every three people you meet can save themselves needless suffering and add years to their lives simply by going to some Human Service Station for periodic health examinations.

"I listened to all this and it came as a distinct shock and revelation. I had read how the infant mortality had been decreased through proper understanding and preventive measures, and I had assumed it applied equally to all ages. But I was wrong.

The Danger of Putting It Off

"I DETERMINED to undergo a thorough physical examination just as soon as I could, whether I felt sick or not. But the next day something happened in the office that required all my attention—I put it off that day and the next—and eventually forgot all about it.

"More recently, however, I was reading a magazine article by Cleveland Moffet. He mentioned the Life Extension Institute—told how it was founded by ex-President Taft, Major General Gorgas, Dr. Eugene Lyman Fisk, Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale, and other forward-looking men to conserve the health of the Nation and make life better worth the living.

[1] The Standardized Physical Examination of the Institute, which includes an examination of every region of the body in the following order: Appearance-Nutrition. Physique and Temperature. Posture. Spine. Extremities. Feet. Pulse. Blood-vessels. Blood-pressure. Heart. Lungs. Stomach and Abdominal Organs. Inguinal Region. Genito-urinary and Venereal. Brain and Nervous System. Skin, Ductless Glands, Lymphatic System. Nose. Throat. Tonsils. Mouth. Teeth. Gums. Tongue. Ears. Eyes, covering a gross test of the vision. Chemic and microscopic examination of the urine. Hemoglobin blood test for anemia. (Other special details are observed in the examination of women and children.)

[2] A study and review by our Medical Staff of your daily living habits, personal and family history, activities, past illnesses, and any other information as to your physical condition and health problems which you may care to submit to us for consideration in connection with your physical examination.

[3] Confidential detailed reports, following an extensive review by our home office staff, of all the data assembled in your case.

[5] Suggestions as to Proper Diet with Appropriate Diet Lists.

[6] Instructions covering Appropriate Exercise with Diagrams.

[7] Other General Suggestions and Hygienic Guidance.

[8] Quarterly urinalyses—chemic and microscopic. The Institute will send you a special container every three months for a specimen. If at the time of the quarterly check-ups any variations appear, your case is again reviewed by our medical staff and such points brought to your attention at once.

[9] During the year the privilege of communicating with the Institute at any time for general information relating to disease prevention and the prolongation of life.

[10] Keep-Well Bulletins.

[11] Monthly Health Journal of the Institute. "How to Live."

"He dwelt on the value of a periodic examination by specialists skilled in that work, and once again I was convinced that it was a good thing. And when I read how The Solvay Process Company had asked the Life Extension Institute to examine all its employees, twice a year, and how other leading business houses had done the same thing, I was convinced that the safeguarding of my health was more important than anything else I could do. I had studied everything else but my health, and yet my health, good or bad, was the thing that made everything else possible or impossible.

"That very day I called up the Life Extension Institute and made an appointment for an examination.

"And such an examination as it was! I have never had anything like it in all my life. They didn't miss a single part of me. They tested my heart and lungs and kidneys—took my blood pressure and made a microscopic examination of my blood—tested my eyes—examined my teeth—pored over my personal history sheet for traces of hereditary disease—delved into my daily living habits—literally made a map of my body and my entire life.

"I tell you frankly I believe that examination has added ten years to my life. I know now the dangers of middle age, but I'm facing them neither blindly nor with fear. I know where my body is strong and where it is weak. I know the hidden dangers and the rocks, and I tell you that my ship will never go to pieces from dangers that I know nothing of.

"I am writing this to you because I think it is something you ought to know. I am as much opposed to fads and quacks as any man who ever lived, and you couldn't get me to go on some nonsensical diet for a million dollars. But I see the value of periodic health examinations.

"What first attracted me to the Life Extension Institute?' you ask. It was the high standing of the men behind it—a sure guarantee of the genuineness of its service. You couldn't get men like Taft and Gorgas and Fisk and Mayo to give their names and their time to anything that wasn't strictly 100% worthy.

"You see, the Life Extension Institute gives no treatments, and it does no doctoring. It simply looks you over as an expert accountant would examine a set of books—to find the mistakes that would not be apparent to the ordinary observer.

A Staff of 5,000 Physicians

"THE Life Extension Institute has its Head Office right here in New York and a staff of 5,000 physicians in all parts of the country. These men are specialists in making examinations.

"Besides the examinations by the individual physicians you get the advice of the Hygiene Board of 100 members. You couldn't assemble such advice in years under any other conditions.

"These men are behind the Life Extension Institute because they believe in it—because it was organized on a broad humanitarian basis—because two-thirds of the profits are set aside in a trust fund for national health propaganda of a national scope.

"That is one reason why the cost of the Institute's services is so low. For as little as $15 you get a thorough examination—additional urinalysis at intervals of three months, chemic and microscopic, with report and suggestions—monthly health bulletins—gratuitous advice on any questions you may choose to ask about personal hygiene.

"It is a great thing. You may realize it even as I did, and yet keep putting it off from day to day. But my advice to you is—don't wait. A complete physical examination is of even more importance in summer than in any other season of the year. Another six months—a year perhaps—and in my case it would have been too late. I would not be writing this message to you to day.

the general material of construction, lined in the interior with thin slabs of precious marble. Light pumice stone was used in the dome. The length of the church from entrance door to eastern apse is 269 feet; its width, including the aisles, 236. The apex of the dome is at an elevation of 175 feet.

The temples of the gods at Heliopolis and Ephesus, at Delos and Baalbek, at Athens and Cyzicus were plundered of their columns. There are forty columns on the ground floor and sixty in the galleries, often crowned with beautiful capitals, in which the monograms of the Emperor Justinian and the Empress Theodora are inscribed. The eight porphyry columns, placed in pairs in the four bays at the angles of the nave, came from the Temple of the Sun at Baalbek. They were presented to Justinian by Marcia, the famous and penitent hitaera, "for the salvation of her soul." The columns of verde antique on either side of the nave are from the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

The grandeur and beauty of the columns, which may still be seen today under the illumination of thousands of lamps, were quite put in the shade, according to Fossati, by the wonders of the mosaic-lined walls and vaults under the light of the sun which poured through the huge windows studded with colored crystals of constantly changing hues. He found the mosaics to be formed of glass of various colors cut into small pieces and applied to the vaults with cement. The gold mosaic was made by gold leaf annealed between two sheets of glass, the art of which has been lost. Silver mosaic was made in the same way. Besides gold and silver, the principal colors are red, blue, and green, although others are used for shading faces. The vaulting throughout is covered with a background of gold, on which conventionalized Persian patterns follow the general lines of construction and form frames, as it were, for the glorious pictures.

Among the hundreds of mosaic pictures which Fossati saw, but which the circumstances of his work did not permit him to copy, were the gigantic "Judgment of God" in the dome and the gigantic Cherubim in the pendentives of the dome. Each of these has four wings and each head is four feet two inches high; the upper feathers of the wings are light green and the under feathers brown.

All the treasures which could be readily removed were taken away by the Turks, and the heavier treasures might have followed had it not been for the awe which successive Sultans had for the holy place. It is recorded that the last Christian service held within its walls took place on May 28, 1453. The next day the Sultan Mohammed entered the surrendered city and immediately made his way to the church. A chronicle relates:

"At the portal he stopped and gazed in awe at the vast silences expanding before him, suddenly broken by the noise of a soldier breaking the floor with an axe. 'Wherefore dost thou that?' inquired the conqueror. 'For the faith,' replied the soldier. And then Mohammed in an impulse of anger struck him, saying, 'To have the whole city to pillage and enslave, leave ye me the buildings.'"

Biggest Wheel of Fortune

Will Allot $60,000,000 in Bonuses for Paris City Bond Issue

AFTER every great war a speculative fever sweeps the countries affected. In this country Wall Street and the oil fields, some of them yet undeveloped, afford the chief centres of gambling. In Paris, the city is to afford an outlet for the impulse to woo fortune by a kind of bond lottery, in which bonuses running as high as $250,000 and aggregating $60,000,000, are to be given to the holders of lucky numbers.

To do this it was necessary to construct a giant "Wheel of Fortune," and the task fell to M. Vico, an engineer living in Colombes, a suburb of Paris. He is a manufacturer of scientific instruments to the Paris municipality, and has been instructed to make a hollow vessel big enough to hold several millions of cartridges, into which it will be impossible even for a child to insert his hand.

Prefect Autrand, Civil Governor of Paris and district, sent for Mr. Vico not long since and said to him:

"See here, Vico, you know the City Council has been authorized by the Congress of France to issue a big liquidation loan so as to enable the city to clear off the big debt it has contracted during the war. The loan will amount to $300,000,000 (1,500,000,000 of francs) in 5 per cent. $100 bonds, to be issued exclusively to the public in France and offered at $96. That means 3,125,000 bonds.

"All these bonds are to be numbered, and are to be gradually paid off at par, that is, at $100 each, in the course of the next sixty years, by six redemption drawings per annum. The duplicate numbers of the bonds, inclosed in small brass cartridges, must be locked up in a single urn at the time the loan is issued. At each drawing, apart from the several thousand bonds to be drawn at par, there will also be several hundred bonds to be drawn with important bonuses, ranging from $250,000 down to $1,000 each.

"Now, we want you to make for us, as quickly as possible, a vessel or receptacle in which all these 3,125,000 numbers, sealed up in small brass cases, can be placed. We want the machine so fixed that at every drawing the vessel shall revolve so as to mix up the numbers thoroughly inside, and then discharge from the urn or vessel by electric means as many of the numbers as are required at each redemption drawing.

"Furthermore, we want this machine so constructed that when once the numbers have been introduced into the urn it will be impossible for anybody to feel with them. A child must not even be able to put his hand into the vessel or touch the numbers within. Now, M. Vico, get to work and see what you can do for us."

M. Vico, who all his life has been a great admirer and student of Edison, then produced one of the most remarkable apparatuses ever seen in Europe. It is a huge orange-shaped hollow sphere, the framework of which is of steel, filled in with half-inch thick panes of glass so that the contents of the sphere can be plainly seen.

This monster sphere or "orange," twenty feet high by eighteen feet broad, is supported six feet from the ground by two iron standards, which hold the pole-tree of the sphere at each side. At the top of the sphere is a small aperture or hole no greater in circumference than a man's thumb, and communicating by a short tube with the interior. Into this interior the "cartridges" containing the numbers of the bonds are shot automatically by means of electricity. When they are all in, a little steel trapdoor or bronze plug, like the shutter of a camera, and moving almost as rapidly as a snapshot apparatus, is closed by a spring, and an outer brass shutter is clasped to and locked with three patent keys specially made in America and sent for the purpose to France.

The aperture, thus locked, is sealed with white tape, on which is set the great red seals of the city.

When a drawing takes place the huge globe, or sphere, is revolved by means of small wheels, fixed at each end of the axletree, moved by electric power. This mixes up the numbers. When the globe comes to a standstill the aperture, instead of being on top, is below, perpendicular to the floor. The seals are then broken, the outer shutter is unlocked and opened, and an electric "extractor" is slid into a groove which automatically locks the extractor to the aperture. The electric current is then connected, a button is pressed, the inner steel shutter flies rapidly on one side, and one of the little brass cartridges falls through a tube into the extractor or magazine. A second electric button is then pressed, and the tiny cartridge falls through the bottom of the extractor into a long glass funnel on to a table where a thick glass bowl has been set to receive it.

A committee of six officials, generally ward officials selected by ballot for each drawing, is waiting to receive the number. The presiding official opens the "cartridge" with a pair of pliers and reads out this first number drawn. The fortunate holder of the bond bearing that particular number will be entitled to receive a bonus of a million francs, or $250,000. The following couple of hundred will be entitled to receive lesser sums, but still very large amounts. Next the "extractor" is removed, and a large glass bowl attached to the funnel. Into this are shot, with the rapidity of cartridges fired from a rifle, all the numbers of the bonds to be redeemed at par. Before this monster "orange" is squeezed dry, "bonuses" will have been extracted from it to the value of $60,000,000.

Charm of Summer Exhibitions

Self Portrait by Eastman Johnson. (On Exhibition at the Ehrich Galleries.)

THE Summer exhibitions of art in New York are far from negligible. In most of the galleries holding such exhibitions the feeling exists that a midsummer public with comparative leisure, a sense of vacation adventure, and freedom from competing excitements is more interested and critical than at busier seasons of the year, and that it proves well worth while to present offerings of special value for inspection and leisurely study.

This year the reaction from the activities of the war lends a particular charm to such refreshment as art affords. During the next two months visitors to the city galleries will find practically every form of art on view and in examples possessing merit and attractiveness.

At the National Arts Club is the annual sketch exhibition of studies by members, in some instances quite fully developed and in others left at a point of agreeable sketchiness. The group by Hayley Lever of studies of troopships and battleships is of exceptionable interest. The artist has worked with a rich impasto and clear strong color, without a trace of the conventional serpentine line which had become a mannerism with him. It is astonishing what the absence of this impressive convention does for his art; it becomes masculine, inspiriting, and full of significance. The movement of the water about the ships is vigorous, and the ships themselves are finely drawn and suggest their pondorable quality, together with the buoyancy of their motion. In the sketch of the Leviathan the dim blue bulk of the ship is unmistakably solid and heavy in spite of the atmospheric film in which it is wrapped. In the study of East Gloucester an unusual subtlety is shown in the relation of the sky and sea and gray sails.

Julia Dewey's "A Garden by the Sea" is pleasantly spacious in composition, with fresh delicate color. In "The River Road," by the same artist, the light on the water is in precisely the right value, and this is true also of the lift of light in the sky in another more ambitious study, "October."

A number of the sketches have for their subject the Autumn scene, and it is entertaining to note the great variety in the ways of seeing and choice of things seen. The typical blaze of American foliage in October is recorded in only one or two examples, the most brilliant that by Eva E. Dealy called "Autumn Flames." "The Yellow Maple," by Leon Dabo, is muffled and brown in tone, Pieter van Veen in his "Falling Leaves" gains by restraint, and Thomas Manley's "Cool Tints, Late Autumn, is what its title suggests, a study of the frosty note in the warmth of Autumn color. Robert Vonnoh's Autumn studies are perhaps the most sensitively expressive of the season's melancholy, and Thomas Watson Ball successfully hits at the decline of the year without abating the richness of its coloring.

The portraits of places are numerous and the range wide. Bermuda and Mexico are commemorated by Eva Dealy, and Anna Benedict Parker has a note on Nassau in the Bahamas; E. L. Hildebrandt does Tangier, and Louis A. Barrett achieves a lively picturesqueness in "My Coach at Udaipur, India"; William Laurel Harris has two large studies of "Mount Moriah and the Mosque of the Holy Rock" and "The Tower of David," respectively; Henry Mosler refers us to Italy and Brittany and Alethea Platt to Clovelly; but most of us will turn with a sense of greater satisfaction not wholly explicable to the familiar charms of Provincetown as Oscar Fehrer and Alice Worthington Ball have seen it, of Gloucester as Jane Peterson and Henry B. Snell and Caroline Northam as well as Hayley Lever show it to us; to the beautiful ivy poisoned "Milton-on-Hudson" of Raphael Weed, to the Palisades, the Berkshires, the Cape Ann woods, Van Cortlandt Park, the Catskills, the Maine coast, the California beaches, and other home-bred landscapes which have given material to artists as diverse in method and temperament as William Baxter Closson, Valentine Molina, Clara McChesney, Dexter E. Dawes, and Elizabeth Gowdy Baker.

At the Ehrich Galleries is an exhibition of early American cabinet paintings, small portraits, and figure compositions of an engaging, intimate character that have after these many years of a different type of portraiture a quite particular charm. Here, for example, is a self-portrait of Eastman Johnson seated in his writing room. There is no emphasis placed upon the figure, which is natural in position and gesture and wholly without the suggestion of pose. Nothing clever or even very interesting attaches to the method of presenting this middle-aged man looking up from his work as he sits slouched in his chair in clothes that have grown to fit every idiosyncrasy of form. Nor is the room in which he sits arranged for aesthetic effect. There is, however, an extremely nice balance maintained among the objects in the room; the pictures on the wall are beautifully placed, and the light and shade are so disposed as to deepen the feeling of space. The color, also, principally brown and gray, is delicate and clear, and merges into tone with a sensitiveness of gradation that would do credit to the little masters of the Dutch school. Mr. Johnson was not a great painter, not always even a good painter, but in such happy moments as are recorded in this and similar spontaneous little studies he did what he started out to do with great felicity and with a certain modesty and decorum characteristic of a generation of painters certainly no more admirable than the present generation, but possibly more lovable in their ethical moods.

There are portraits of Martin Van Buren and William Inman by Henry Inman, whose delicate pencilling touch brings out subtleties of character very difficult to preserve in the synthetic workmanship of the present day. There are several little pictures by Thomas Sully of torn hat fame, and in more than one instance the pencils are used on both sides. A portrait of a pretty lady, for example, is backed by a drawing of an extraordinarily martial soldier.

The feminine artist in the group is one of the gifted Peale family, Anna Claypoole Peale, daughter of James Peale. She married the Rev. Dr. William Staughton for her first husband, whose portrait represents her in the exhibition. Other painters are Dubourjal, Rothermel, Alonzo Chappel, James Sharples, F. Fenouelt the younger, Edward Green Malbone, Charles Robert Leslie, Charles Loring Elliott, John Vanderlyn, and Edward Savage. A head of Washington surrounded by a wreath of flowers is painted by Jean Alexandre Remy Coudor, a Frenchman who came to this country to live early in the nineteenth century, and whose work has carried over the grace and dainty exuberance of the eighteenth century.

The Summer exhibition at the Babcock Galleries offers deep delights. As usual in all exhibitions of a cheerful popularity, the most cheerful and popular things may be traversed rapidly enough. Such light adventures as the little group of Indian pictures woven about the straightforward, competent "Land of the Blackfoot," by Frank Tenney Johnson, as a firm central knot in the gay fabric; such pretty childlike fantasies as "Appreciation," by F. S. Church; such obvious appeals to the romantic and proletariat as the "Immigrants," by Eugene Higgins; such bits of reportorial observation as Hayley Lever's "Decorations for the French Commission," in which a woefully unrewarding subject fails to stimulate the painter's mind—all these may attract a casual attention without holding it beyond the limit of ordinary gallery courtesy.

But when in Gallery A the lovely dignity and quietude of Wyant's "In Connecticut Valley" have a chance to enter the consciousness of the most languid observer, the real emotion of the experience begins. In this beautiful picture are all of Wyant's noblest characteristics, although it hardly would be called a "typical Wyant" by those to whom the phrase signifies only the silvery, somewhat meticulous, infinitely refined, forest subjects by which the artist chiefly is known. The composition is broad and vigorous; the line of the large clump of trees at the left declining with a slow, strong curve to the lighter masses of verdure at the right, the foreground accented by the great stones of a Connecticut field, and varied by undergrowth and thin bush, the sky bending to the distant plain, with delicately modeled clouds moving lightly across the magnificent architecture of its essential form. The unity of the work is its distinguishing and significant characteristic. Not a single stroke of the brush but affirms the reason of its existence in the profoundly studied texture of the whole. And the closest examination of the workmanship only strengthens the impression of the importance of such painting as an expression of the character and mind of the painter. What knowledge of nature and philosophy of living have gone into that careful, yet authoritative and confident, manipulation of the pigment. How superbly the memory has held the total effect of the scene while the mind selected and confirmed the details necessary to secure it. The facts of Wyant's life have nothing to do with the quality of his art, but his long struggle against infirmity and his triumph over a paralysis of hand that threatened to destroy his career are manifestations in another direction of the self-discipline that speaks with such power to inspire in the grave beauty of this New England landscape.

On the opposite wall is Blakelock's "Adirondack Landscape." This also is a masterpiece, and not in the most exploited vein of the painter's achievement. The shadows are suffused with light, the light is less concentrated than in the spectacular "Moonlight" and sunsets, the heavy pigment is pulled about until its skin is wrinkled and crumpled like that of an old Italian woman; nothing could be less monotonous than this cunningly tortured surface, yet the general effect is tranquil. In the color, also, a subtle variety is gained by letting a cool bluish ground color occasionally appear where the foliage meets the sky. It is a very fine painting for those who do not ask for the complete subordination of nature to the artist's imagination.

Associated with these paintings, each of which is just enough out of the familiar style of its author to escape the taint of repetitiveness that exercises a most unhealthy influence upon collectors, is a little French landscape by Winslow Homer, "Cernay la ville," as far as possible removed from the stern realism of his sea pictures and the brilliant synthesis of his water colors. A cluster of buildings in the middle distance, a flat foreground and a quiet sky. It is almost unbelievable that it should dominate Mr. Bogert's adjacent and dramatic version of a midsummer night as it does. Its power lies in its truth-telling quality, nothing set down in exaggeration, nothing emphasized, everything expressed with the utmost simplicity and directness, without surplusage or the least touch of rhetoric—the result as restful as intercourse with a mind innocent of sentimentalism and devoid of conceit.

There are pictures in the exhibition that have force and beauty, conspicuously Walter Griffin's heavily molded "Birches and Pine Trees," with its singing color and its deep hollows and high peaks, a painting that will grow old as interestingly as a Frenchwoman of the ancien régime. But you need not get further than Gallery A to have your day's reward if perchance or per choice you are a pilgrim of art.

Why They Entered Annapolis

One "Thirsted for Power," Another Wanted to Dance and "Make a Hit With the Ladies," But Eagerness for Education and Patriotism Were Not Lacking

The Campus, Annapolis. White Studio

By HORACE JULES FENTON

THE members of the Plebe Class, United States Naval Academy, were recently asked in an English exercise to state their reasons for coming to the institution. The answers were varied, as, indeed, might be expected. Many revealed the fact that the writers were, after all, only boys, with boys' dreams, enthusiasm, and points of view. Others displayed a surprising clearness of judgment and a settled purpose that is father to success. All answers were penned in sweating earnestness, for Naval Academy regulations do not admit of joking, yet many glowed with that unconscious humor which sometimes relieves the tedium of the instructor's life.

It is gratifying to note that the educational advantages of the Naval Academy attracted these boys rather more than anything else. About 42 per cent. of the class gave as their reason for coming that they wanted to get an education. As one put it, "I wanted to get the best technical training I could get, and so I came to the Naval Academy." Another ended his essay with the sweeping statement that "the education one gets at the Academy is far superior to that of any other institution in the country." Very gratifying to the Naval Academy, I am sure, but, alas! for poor Harvard, Yale, Cornell, &c. Where in this asinine world do they stand?

Another would-be officer, badly afflicted with a common misfortune, put the same idea in a different way. "The subjects taught," he wrote, "are practical, the instructors are assuming the best." If his was looking for marks, better spelling might have brought them. The fact that education at the Naval Academy, like salvation, is free, was not wholly overlooked, for a round dozen of young sailors offered that as the determining factor in their cases.

"The economy of the place attracted me," said one; "if I had gone to a college it would have cost me a good bit of money." He, too, it is hoped, will improve in the gentle art of spelling before flying an Admiral's flag. One youth had learned, furthermore, that not only was education at this school free, but it was given to the students willy-nilly. "I was not getting on well at college," he wrote, "so I came here, where they make you get up in the morning. I am not very fond of the place, but I am profiting by it." Slug-a-beds are certainly not tolerated here.

Still another, regarding the money question from the paternal standpoint, wrote: "By entering this school I relieved my father of a burden that aided him in many ways." One feels like entering a demurrer to this allegation on the ground of ambiguity, but its meaning is perhaps not beyond conjecture. Right here it may not be improper to remark that, judging from an experience of several years spent in wrestling with midshipmen's themes, there is no depth of ambiguity that midshipmen cannot reach. Like all other students of the refined art of English composition they have in a mysterious way their blunders to perform.

The call of the sea and a vague desire to see the world lured about half a hundred in this class to the Academy.

> They that go down to the sea in ships,
> That do business in great waters:
> These see the works of the Lord,
> And His wonders in the deep.

So sang the Psalmist centuries ago, and the truth of his song is still with us. "I want to see the world from the deck of a battleship," wrote several anxious young gentlemen. Well, who would not, particularly when that battleship represents a powerful navy and a rich country! But many a young naval officer has fully satisfied that desire before the end of his first cruise. After one has been for some time knocking about in foreign ports, sweating under tropic suns or freezing on polar seas, seeing the world from the deck of a warship ceases to be so allaring. Few naval officers continue to look upon that as a good and sufficient reason for remaining in the service.

A small percentage of the class blamed their parents for their present situation. "I myself was indifferent," confessed one. Our parents certainly are willful. They bring us into the world, they stuff us with Hornby's Oats and Solomon's Proverbs, and, whether or no, they top us off with an academic education. But, strange to say, most of us who survive the experience are inclined to be thankful.

"I came," wrote one, "because both my parents have been connected with the naval service, and I was born in a navy yard." He was an Irish lad who wrote that. Perhaps he is kindred to that Irishman who, moved by the same florid notion, exclaimed: "Begorra! If a cat should have kittens in the oven, would ye call 'em biscuits?" Truly, environment is everything. So intense was the desire of one parent to have his son embark on a naval career that his mind reverted to it on his deathbed. "Father's last words were," wrote one midshipman, "'Don't let James lead any other life than that of a naval officer.'"

Naturally naval officers often desire their sons to follow in their wakes, so to speak, and usually the sons of naval officers are quite on fire to do so. In such cases parental desire, inheritance, and personal ambition combine to make a boy's career at the Academy successful. But where paternal wishes are alone responsible the issue is often dubious. To complete the Academy course successfully requires effort and mental aptitude for the peculiar life and conditions that obtain here, and the young man who comes merely at the command of his father too frequently lacks the necessary enthusiasm for the work here and the natural fitness for the life to insure success.

The American boy is naturally patriotic. It is no surprise, therefore, to find that a large number in this class were urged to come to the Academy by love of country.

"I came," wrote one, "because of my patriotic instinct." "I yearned to defend my native land," wrote another, and we can imagine that his heart beat a mild tattoo against his measly ribs as he penned the words. But at this writing, when the air is filled not so much with rumors of war or the clash of arms but rather with the echoes thereof, what must his feelings be! Another young middy laid the blame to avuncular suggestion. He said: "The war stories of my uncle fired my enthusiasm, and I just had to come." A fourth asserted his belief that "no citizen can attain to greater honor than by enlisting as an officer in the United States Navy." He probably overlooked the fact that officers do not enlist, and that there are other lines of endeavor in the country quite as necessary to the welfare of the nation and quite as productive of honor.

A fifth expressed the same idea a little more ecstatically by writing: "The life of a naval officer is the highest attainment a man can reach." It is, we admit, a high calling, but are there not others quite as high? A sixth midshipman soared to the loftiest realms of fancy mixed with patriotism when he brought a half-page of heart outpourings to a close with the following peroration: "When serving one's country one is an honor to three beings: himself, his country, and his God!" An utterance worthy indeed of Patriotic Henry. We smile perhaps at these florid sentiments, but in spite of their boyishness we cannot but entertain a certain respect for the enthusiasm and zeal portrayed. The fire of that undaunted spirit who shouted from the blood-stained deck of his sinking ship those immortal words of defiance, "I have not yet begun to fight," still burns undimmed in the souls of American youth.

The glamour of military life had, of course, its attractions for many. The romance and trappings of war have yet a compelling force in spite of peace societies and their propaganda. What boy, if he is good for anything at all, does not at some time become enamoured of a uniform—a policeman's at first, perhaps, but sooner or later a soldier's or a sailor's? Many get over this desire by the time they reach the age of discretion, but not all.

"I wanted to wear a blue uniform," was the simple reason one young gentleman gave for wishing to enter the Naval Academy. That ambition is now satisfied. Another wrote very optimistically: "I always thought how nice it would be to become an Admiral." Well, he is now on the high way to become one. Another chose his life career for reasons that, if not so ambitious, still are admittedly compelling. "My first impressions of the naval service were good," he wrote. "I saw many naval officers at Charleston. They attended all the balls there and made great hits with the ladies."

To make "hits with the ladies" is undoubtedly one of the flattering possibilities of a naval officer's career. Another admitted that he had come because he thought that "life here must be one continual round of hops, entertainments, fights, escapades, and every other wildly romantic thing not to be found in Iowa." How "flat, stale, and unprofitable," alas, must life in Iowa be!

Another, more plainly filled with militarism, closed by saying: "Ever since I became a better boy I always thought I would like to drill in the hot sun." What speculation does not this open up as to the possible previous career of this youth? If, furthermore, after a single two-hour dress parade on a June afternoon he still dotes on drilling in the hot sun he should make an unusual officer.

These seem to be the main causes that inveigle boys to enter the Naval Academy—education, love for the sea, the desire to see the world, patriotism, and military glamour. But there are various other reasons quite as human, if not so idealistic. Thus, in this particular group of midshipmen the assurance of being well taken care of by a benevolent Government was a prime factor with a few. Said one canny youth: "I came because I am sure of my bread and butter when my four years here are over." "I won't be laid off in hard times," wrote another. One ambitiously penned the following: "I want to be something out of the ordinary, not just a plain workingman."

Whether being out of the ordinary avails more for salvation than being a plain workingman, he did not say. The world would like to know. Social prestige as a reason was not overlooked. "Now I can move in the best society," spelled one with customary inaccuracy. One came for the rather vague reason that "it sounded interesting." Still another steered his course hither to fill a

An Account by One of Them of the International Gathering in Switzerland Which Denounced the Allies' Treaty Terms

The writer of this article is one of the women who attended the International Conference for Permanent Peace held in Zurich, Switzerland, in May. It was a gathering of people whose aims for peace, according to the general impression in this country, carried them very far toward sympathy with conquered Germany. They went on record as disapproving vehemently the "severity" of the Allies' terms set forth in the draft of the Peace Treaty and sent a telegram of appeal to President Wilson in the name of the Fourteen Points.

WHITE slavery, prohibition, laws for women and children, and caring for the sick should be the subjects taken up by the Women's Congress now meeting in Switzerland. The women guided by the English, American, and Swiss must be practical and let international political questions alone. Their work today is to heal the wounds of a war-torn world."

Thus ran an editorial article in the Swiss Journal de Genève, welcoming the 200 women of the International Conference for Permanent Peace in Zurich on May 12.

But the editor had forgotten those were not club women of a few years ago. During the war many of them had become voters plunged sometimes against their will into the turbulent political life of their countries. Since their first congress at The Hague in 1915 they had daily eaten and drunk of international politics. They had come firmly to believe that today not only diplomats but ordinary men and even women could have a say on world questions. With a total disregard for the well-meaning, kindly editor's warning, they trave'ed together for a whole week through the mazes of the peace terms just presented to the Germans, the covenant of the League of Nations and the international blockade plans.

Even though the Governments of the world looked worried and frowned, even though passport difficulties were many and the journey at best tedious and haphazard, these women came together from fifteen different countries. Japan alone of the five great allied powers was unrepresented, and the Oriental point of view was entirely lacking in the various discussions. Each of the twenty-six Englishwomen received their passports after promising "to indulge in no Socialist propaganda." France refused passports to her women, but three finally arrived after combining personal business in Switzerland with the conference. One Italian delegate was allowed to come "to study the costumes of tout le monde." Belgium had no delegate, for her threat to expatriate any woman attending proved so effective that only Mlle. la Fontaine sat as a silent onlooker.

For weeks the Munich women, too, were refused passports, but for quite a different reason. "There is no such country as Switzerland," said the Communist Government which held the power after Kurt Eisner's assassination. "I will telegraph as proof," said Frau Hallgarten, one of the delegates. But the Communists' creed recognizing no national boundaries was not to be swayed by telegraphed evidence. So the women waited until the counter-revolution took place and passports were in vogue again. Twenty-seven women finally arrived from Germany, four from Austria, and two from Hungary.

The neutral countries of Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark sent twenty-five women. Russia was missing, as the International Committee has never had an active organisation there. "The Irish Republic" sent three women, who sat, not with Great Britain, as did Australia, but safely on the other side of the room with the Americans.

Headed by Jane Addams, who presided over the conference and had previously conferred with Secretary Lansing and Colonel House in Paris, the women of the United States were there twenty-six strong. The State Department allowed twelve to go from this country; the remaining fourteen were already in Europe in various capacities.

Whatever any one may think about women's having her finger in the international pie, a little thing like a four months' voyage on the sea will never prove a deterrent. It took the three Australian women just one-sixth of a year to reach Zurich by way of India, Egypt, and England. They started in March, spent one week conferring with their sisters from many lands, and in July, if they hurry, they will be able to report back to those who sent them.

It was necessary for the Scandinavian women to cross through Germany. It was an eight instead of the usual three day journey, and the delegates took their luncheons with them—also their dinners and breakfasts. Sometimes they cooked their meals over their little spirit lamps on station platforms while waiting for trains which ran without time table. Dr. Aletta Jacobs, the Dutch suffragist who in 1912 traveled around the world with Mrs. Catt organizing women for suffrage, headed the delegation from Holland.

These women who met at Zurich were not women of great wealth or social position; neither were they, with one or two exceptions, workingwomen. Jane Addams termed them "just an ordinary group of citizens." They were, however, a little out of the ordinary in that they were typically "doers." Most of them were professional women—doctors, lawyers, teachers, professors, social and civic workers, writers. Nationally and sometimes internationally their names might be found linked with the suffrage movement, with work of all kinds for both women and children. Many of them hold public office in their communities. Jane Addams and Lillian Wald are the heads of our two greatest American settlements, Hull House of Chicago and Henry Street of New York. Florence Kelley, as Secretary of the National Consumers' League, has been instrumental in much of the labor legislation for women passed in the United States. Dr. Alice Hamilton of Harvard University is the first woman to receive a professorship in a man's college. In addition were unofficial representatives from the Y. W. C. A., the Society of Friends, and the National Catholic War Council.

The list of England's delegates read like the roster of her various suffrage societies during the struggle for the vote. Among them were Mrs. Despard, General French's sister and veteran suffragist, still speaking with her old fire in spite of her seventy-odd years; Mrs. Philip Snowden, opponent of the Militant Suffragists, who has lectured in America often, and Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, who more than once broke into jail with Mrs. Pankhurst. Margaret Ashton, member of the Manchester City Council, and Miss Rayds, Secretary to the Scottish Women's Hospital and active in relief work in Saloniki and Serbia, were two other prominent Englishwomen there.

Lida Heymann and Anita Augsberg of Munich have been for years leaders in the German suffrage movement. Dr. Helene Stöcker of Berlin, another delegate, is the founder of the German League for the Protection of Mothers, and has under her control 400 homes for illegitimate children and their mothers. Frau Kuira, from Austria, is a well known child welfare expert, and the two delegates from Hungary, former active suffragists and feminists, are officials in the Communist Hungarian Government—one, Vilma Glueklich, at the head of a bureau established to look into matters concerning women; the other, Paula Pogani, the editor of Woman, the Government newspaper devoted to women's interests. Rosika Schwimmer of Hungary, prominent in the 1915 Congress at The Hague, instigator of the Ford Peace Party, and Hungarian Minister to Switzerland under the Karolyi régime, was among the missing. "Was she perchance in prison?" it was whispered. Oh! no—only not in favor with the Soviet Republic of Bela Kun, and therefore keeping very much in the background and asking for no passport, waiting perhaps for the return of Karolyi into power.

Back in 1915 the International Congress at The Hague had voted to meet whenever the official Peace Conference should be "summoned." Not even a long and bitter war had deterred them. It was the same group, yet it was quite different. Then, the Socialists among them could be counted on one hand; now, they were not quite a majority. Then, the Socialists represented the extreme radical point of view; now, at least in Central Europe, they were the counter-revolutionists crushing Bolshevism. Then, a communist was unheard of among their ranks; now, women who belonged to the communist party were there from both Hungary and Germany. Then, to look at their faces the effects of the war were hardly discernible; now, many of the Scandinavians and Central Europeans showed in their pinched, unhealthy looking faces the lack of food.

It was a coincidence that the women's first session found the ink on the peace terms hardly dry. The German women had received their copies while on the way, and arrived in a hopeless frame of mind. They said that "even President Wilson," whom they looked to for "a peace that would temper justice with mercy," had "apparently failed them." They had expected to give up Alsace and Lorraine, to restore the devastated territory, to pay indemnities, but they said they "could not sign the peace that was handed them." To sign would be fatal, yet not to sign they realized would be equally fatal.

If the Germans were submerged in hopelessness, the rest of the congress also voiced dissent from "the severity of the Allies." It hurled by wire at the Paris Conference a set of resolutions denouncing the treaty as a provoker of future wars and urging amendments in harmony with President Wilson's Fourteen Points. The women particularly assailed the blockade proposal, recalling that England had been holding meetings of protest backed by many persons of rank, clergymen and people of prominence, whose influence had been absolutely for the war, and that America and Herbert Hoover seemed ready to send all possible aid. From every part of the Balkans and Central Europe, enemy or allied, came stories of starvation and under-nourishment of women and children. Train loads of little boys and girls kept coming into Switzerland for a two weeks' "feed," then to be sent back perhaps to starve again. The women at the congress continuously criticised the Big Five at Paris for favoring a blockade as a last weapon against the enemy.

A second resolution signed by Jane Addams and wired to Paris asked "that the Governments take immediate action

One Trophy at the Peking Headquarters Is a Discredited Household Idol—Two Thousand Converts Won in Two Years

YEH SZU LING of the Chiou Shih Chun arrived in New York the other day.

He is not a Chinese mandarin nor other outlandish potentate. His real name is Charles Henry Jeffries. The foregoing strange procession of sounds is the nearest the Chinese can get to expressing his title of Commissioner for China of the Salvation Army. "Chiou Shih Chun" means, literally, "Save-World Army," there being no symbol in Chinese to translate our word "salvation." "Yeh" means "leaf of tree"—Mr. Jeffries is at a loss to understand why they call him that—and "Szu Ling" is the Chinese for Commissioner.

Commissioner Jeffries is just back after two years in China, during which he has had the satisfaction of enrolling 2,000 native converts. His labors have been almost entirely among the poor. About the future of the Salvation Army's work and that of other Christian missionaries in China he is optimistic.

"I think," he says, "that within the next century Christianity will have made greater strides there than in India."

The Commissioner expects to spend a short vacation in this country and his native England. His whole life thereafter, unless his plans are changed, will be devoted to Christianizing China. After his vacation he expects to return there for a stay of at least seven years.

Seated the other day in the Salvation Army headquarters in New York, where the strange Chinese characters on the band of his cap lent an exotic touch to the well-known red and blue headgear, Yeh Szu Ling told of his work for the "Chiou Shih Chun."

"It is just two and a half years ago," he said, "that the Salvation Army sent its pioneer band of officers to China. There were forty in the party. Their knowledge of Chinese was nil, but they 'had the spirit'—which, among Salvationists, means that they could plug along, meeting discouragement and indifference, even downright opposition, with a calm assurance that some day all would change to respect.

"Their first problem was the establishment of a language school. Chinese has 55,000 characters, each with four tonal inflections, and every inflection has a different meaning. The forty Salvationists set right to work. Their entire time was devoted to the task of mastering the language. I had so many illusions when I got to Peking fifteen months ago that I could not give all my time to studying Chinese, but I managed to work at it several hours a day, and of the 55,000 characters multiplied by four I have mastered about 400!

"To the original band of forty foreign officers five more have been added, and with them are thirty-five Chinese assistants who have become Christians. From the millions of Chinese around them this little group has recruited two thousand converts, who have passed through the three stages of probation which the Salvation Army imposes upon converts in all lands. These two thousand 'soldiers' have exactly the same standing as members of the Salvation Army in this country.

"From the start the Chinese converts were most eager to hold outdoor meetings. Their white teachers wished first to give them a foundation of knowledge, but they demurred. 'Let us go out on the street,' they kept saying, 'and convert others.'

"While the policy of the Salvation Army does not include ignoring the upper classes, the determination to focus efforts upon the poor people virtually amounts to that. China has been divided into four territories, the start having been made in the north. In all, twenty-two corps have been organized and are now just getting into their stride. There are five corps in Peking and two in Tientsin. The remaining fourteen are scattered as far north as the border of Mongolia. Within ten years I expect that there will be 500 foreign officers at work in China.

"When a Chinese becomes converted he loses standing to a certain degree among his fellows, but this is not lasting. In time his change of faith is accepted, and it is not long before he begins to bring in others eager to become converted.

"But there are difficulties in the way. All the walls of China are not made of stone. There is one wall, which has existed for centuries and still exists, higher and thicker than any built of stone—the Wall of Superstition.

"It was the Salvationist uniform which first attracted the Chinese crowds, for they are above all else curious. They came to stare at the uniforms and remained to hear of the new strange Sheng Ti, (God.) The first converts were scoffed at. 'Follow the foreigner if you like,' said their kin and neighbors. But soon converts began to come in.

"One of those converted at Tientsin was a fisherman who lived in Ch'uan Tiou, a village distant two days and a night by the 'Ho Luen Chaun' or 'fire wheel boat,' as the Chinese call a steamer. He brought in eight converts from his village, who visited me at Peking and pleaded to have a corps established at their village. I consented with some reluctance, because of the great distance and the necessity of placing a woman, Captain Dare, in charge. But eighty persons were present at the first meeting she conducted, and today, only a few months after the beginning of the work in the village, there are 200 Christians there.

"We have been singularly successful in dealing with the poor. I do not myself understand how we have accomplished as much as we have. Missionary friends of mine in Peking and Tientsin have often asked me the reason, and my only answer has been: 'We have the spirit.'

"We find the Chinese eager to hear us. It seems to me that they have grown indifferent to their old religions. When I first arrived in China I was amazed to see the condition of the beautiful temples. Some were in complete decay. I have seen the heads of idols, which had fallen off, carelessly swept into a corner, while worshippers contentedly offered their devotions to the headless figures. I have seen great holes in the temple roofs. I have seen places of worship going to ruin because of the indifference alike of priests and their followers.

"But some Chinese remain content with their gods. If you tell one of these the story of how Samson destroyed the temple he will smile his bland smile and say:

"'Very interesting—but we have a god who hurled a mountain across the sea!'

"And they will ask: 'Why pray to your one God for health? He must be kept very busy. We have a god for every disease.'"

Among instances of another sort, the Commissioner told this:

"A little girl about 12 years old drifted into one of the meetings, returned, and finally became converted. But she did not dare tell her folks at home.

"In all Chinese households there are morning devotions before the household god. Having become a Christian the little girl felt that she could not bow down before the idol but she did not have the courage to renounce it openly before her father and mother. So she easily solved the difficulty for the time being by staying in bed until the morning worship was over and her parents had left the house for their daily tasks.

"After several days of this her mother took her to task, and the little girl, cornered beyond hope of escape, told of her conversion and said she would never again worship the household god.

"The mother happened to be a woman of sense.

"'You have been a good girl these last few days,' she remarked. 'If this new religion makes you so obedient it must be a good religion.' And she decided to investigate.

"She came to the Salvation Army meetings and was converted. Before her conversion she had had the reputation of being a shrew. While attending the meetings her temper became less hasty and her tongue less sharp. And when she told her husband that she, as well as her daughter, had become a Christian, he said:

"'If following the foreigner has cured your temper, while my prayers to the household god all these years to cure it have been vain, then the foreign religion must be better than ours. Take me to your meetings.' Soon he, too, embraced Christianity.

"But then came the difficult question of what to do with the household god. The family at last decided to present it to a neighbor, who was too poor to purchase one for himself.

"A month passed. Then the neighbor rushed in, his eyes flashing fire, with the idol tucked under his arm.

"'This god is a fiend!' he shouted. 'I have had nothing but bad luck since the accursed thing came into my house.'

"'And I,' remarked the Christian Chinaman, 'have had nothing but happiness since I cast it out. Come with me and hear the foreigner's new teaching.'

"The net result was another Chinese family converted. The deposed idol now reposes as an ornament in the Salvation Army headquarters at Peking.

"The 'Chiou Shih Chun' is identified in organization with the Salvation Army as it is known in the sixty-two other lands where it has been established. The Chinese Salvationist must take his wife, if he be unmarried and desires to wed, from the army's ranks. He must be a Christian, and be content with just enough worldly goods to meet his normal wants. He must unreservedly obey his superiors, and live a life that will make him worthy to preach the word of Christ.

"It is pathetic to see the Chinese converts holding their open-air meetings on the street corners of Peking and Tientsin. Night after night they are to be found ringed around by a curious throng preaching with all the fervor of Salvationist veterans of the East End of London. Thousands of Chinese who have not yet become converts are, nevertheless, regular attendants at these meetings."

Chapters in the War Story of Jimsey of the East Side, Whose Steady Civilian Job Was That of Proof Boy in a New York Newspaper Office

By ALLEN S. WILL.

BESIDES affecting continents, empires, thrones, and things of that sort, the war has also profoundly affected the office boy. Some hundreds of his species, whose habitat is the U. S. A., have been shaken out of the half dreamy lethargy which characterizes so many of them, shoved into khaki, slammed through the curriculum of an army training camp, shunted across the ocean, and sent scurrying to the firing line—and thus they awoke physically, mentally, and spiritually. They are streaming back these days into the currents of peace, bent on making good as they did in war, and with a new confidence in themselves that has transformed their outlook on life.

Now, there is Jimsey. What the war did for him it did for others. He happens to be under close observation for the purposes of this tale, for he is an office boy in a newspaper editorial room.

Jimsey is—or was—just a New York boy. He is really a man, having passed the age of 25 years, but he had kept on being an office boy when he crossed the border line of maturity, and we continued to call him a boy. Since the age of 14 he had swung in his daily routine like a pendulum from his home on the east side to the office and back again. He was about as regular as a pendulum in his movements, too, for he was a good boy and a good soldier in the little war that he was always waging against adverse circumstances, as many Americans from Abraham Lincoln down have waged it.

His most daring visions, as far as his present biographer's observations have extended, were of a free ticket to the circus when its glories unfolded in Madison Square Garden every Spring, and of coveted passes to the big league ball game which the night editor in moments of freedom from the nightly tortures by space pirates gave him out of the kindness of a really kind heart.

At the office Jimsey lived in an atmosphere of the stirring events of the world, as little moved by them as if he had been on top of Pike's Peak kicking his heels in eternal snow. To him the daily drama of the world's news meant nothing more than batches of proofs to deliver. The proofs might chronicle the fall of a dynasty or the colorless routine of the daily court calendar—they were all the same to Jimsey. He just went ahead and did his job, obeying orders to the best of his ability, helping his oppressed sisters and brothers out of his earnings, going along with the procession and seeming to feel that it would always go on in about the same way.

Then came the draft, and little official notices from the Provost Marshal General's gigantic machine began to come in, addressed—no, not to Jimsey, for that naturally isn't his real name—but those notices bore was one nobody in the office but the pay people and Jimsey himself would have recognized. The person we called Jimsey was now an individual, big enough to be a subject of official concern to the United States Government, to be called upon to uphold the country's flag, to be studied through the medium of a draft board questionnaire and analyzed for the purpose of determining the particular part which HE could best perform in the overwhelming struggle of principalities and powers.

As the United States looked Jimsey over thoroughly, Jimsey himself began to think that maybe his responsibilities were bigger, after all, than he had supposed, supposing that he had supposed at all. He could be a hero, too. The far off glamour of fame, which he had been accustomed to contemplate as embodied in the star baseball pitcher, something entirely apart from himself in the present, past, or future, was dipping around tantalisingly in his direction. Some day a battle involving the honor of America might call for a deed which he could perform. Here he was on the threshold of a new world.

What to do? Just go along as before, obeying orders—so it appeared to Jimsey, according to his lights. Evolution was doing the rest.

And then the army doctor decided that Jimsey was fit! Despite the slight stoop in his shoulders, the youthful lungs were sound and functioned perfectly. The height, only a little more than five feet—other boys had sometimes called Jimsey a "runt"—and the weight, 124 pounds, was no bar to the big work that a soldier in the greatest war of history had to carry on. The defects in the teeth had not progressed so far as to leave a lack of molars sturdy enough to grind up hardtack and army beef. The lad who had considered noteworthy physical achievement as something beyond him, and had gazed upon its records in the newspaper stories of athletic events with a sense of distant reverence, found that he was in reality one of the physical elect of the enlisted nation.

It wasn't long before Jimsey told us good-bye with many a jest in the rich Bowery dialect that had edified the office so often, and I went to Camp Upton with the other rookies to start the process of "canning the Kaiser." Before long he was back on a night's leave of absence, his face beaming under his army headgear to tell us how things were going.

"Say, youse oughta lamp our Lieutenant," was about the way his story ran. "Some boy he is! He tells the bunch when he gets us out on the drill field: 'If youse guys play fifty-fifty with me I guess it'll be all right, but if you don't I'll trim the hide off you!' I guess he must be a West Pointer!" This last in a burst of admiration.

Jimsey's trained spirit of obedience was standing him in good stead in the great adventure of his life. He peeled potatoes on K. P. duty, and had his hands blistered cutting down trees, but he "carried on" as he had done in his office boy duties and threw on it. On each successive evening of leave we saw his shoulders and back slowly strengthening, his chest heaving with a degree of free expansion that was almost startling, and the flaming color of robust health beginning to chase the pallor from his countenance.

And then the time came to say farewell to Jimsey and his stories of camp life for a long time, and he went away with others of his division on a transport. Another was added to the list of names for which the casualty lists that came to the office from Washington were scanned. There was a long roll on the bronze tablet at the entrance to the office, the tablet placed there to show honor to the men from the office who had gone out to fight, and Jimsey's real name looked as big on it as any of the others.

Then one day, after a year's absence, Jimsey came back! Yes, he "came back" both in the slangy sense in which he probably had used the words oftenest in his bantering with the other office boys, and also in the sense in which an English purist would employ them. The finely cut up soldier who returned safely out of the Argonne furnace would have been a credit to any army. We drew in our breath when he told us that twenty-five pounds had been added to his weight. His carriage was almost perfectly erect, his head held up at the military poise, his eyes clear, his face radiant with health, and his voice strong, cheery, and confident. No one could truthfully call Jimsey a "runt" again.

There was the usual office stir when a soldier is welcomed back. The preoccupied look faded from the faces of the men who were accustomed to badger their brains over the perverted patois in which the cable companies sometimes clothe skeletonized dispatches from the Peace Conference. The editors beamed. Reporters stopped tapping their typewriters and looked up. The "morgue" man (keeper of the obituary files) smiled as happily as if he had found at the first attempt an obscure clipping for which a chap with his eye on the clock had put in an eleventh-hour demand.

So Jimsey told us about it, but with far less of the Bowery brogue than we had been accustomed to hear. A part of that seemed to have slipped from him like a garment.

"I'm a first-class private, and that's next to a Corporal," he said, and we smiled as he began to recite to us his own Odyssey. One might well doubt whether the adventures of Ulysses seemed more marvelous to that ancient wanderer than the journey on the big transport to England and then across the Channel and through France appeared to this lad of the east side, whose reach of travel for years had been bounded by the subway. One of his complaints was that he had not been allowed to stay long enough in England to see the sights. But France—"Oh, boy!"—he had seen so much there, in fact, had "walked nearly all over it." People said that a walking tour abroad was the best, and he "sure had it." Did he want to stay? No, "the old U. S. A. for me," he told us. "Them that wants to live there can have their way, but not for mine."

Had he been in the Argonne with the division? Oh, yes, he had been under fire for seventy-six days continuously there and on the Marne and the Veale, but no German bullet had even scratched him. Had he killed any Germans? No, they ran away too fast for the bullets to overtake them when his division got after them—some division, that!

A born mimic, Jimsey almost gave us a shiver as he imitated by whistling through his teeth the sound of the storm of bullets in the dark fastnesses of the Argonne. Had he become used to being under shellfire? Well, he had learned to dig a small hole and crawl into it—"but if I hear a tire bust in Times Square tonight," he said, "you'll see me drop into the gutter," for it was hard to break the habit of "ducking" shells. So we listened awhile, but not to boasting, for, like the great mass of the American soldiers who are flooding homeward, Jimsey had nothing to say in praise of himself.

We learned by degrees that something else had happened to "pick me up and shake me up," as Jimsey put it. In the American draft army, where every man in the ranks was a lord and a composer at the same time, he had mingled in a new relation with millionaires, and brokers who hoped to be millionaires, and lawyers and peace time "bosses." Men of their kind who carried rifles in the division were no longer giving him orders, but were his "buddies" in danger, eating at the same mess, sharing the shelter of shell holes with him, all drawn together by that almost spiritual comradeship that comes from an equality of association in the supreme trial of battle and hardship. Jimsey had grown more like these men, and he had absorbed some of their breadth of aspiration, which, after all, he found was not incompatible with service.

Jimsey's entente cordiale with the payroll was promptly re-established, with a raise in his salary and a vacation to boot. But that wasn't enough. We soon found that he wanted a job that paid better and gave him a bigger chance of advancement. Going after the Huns had got him in the way of going after other things. And so, though some obstacles were met, his superiors in the editorial room have started to open the way for a job for him in the press room, and "they were talking real serious about it last night," Jimsey confided to me in our last conversation.

And still every morning Jimsey takes the setting-up exercises that he learned in the army, for he vividly realizes the benefit of them. "I'm holdin' that extra weight," he reports, with elation.

Such is the simple tale of Jimsey, first-class private—"and that's next to a Corporal." In the case of this tale, the end is a beginning. Jimsey is just starting on life, after long halting on the threshold, and his army experience gave him the start. Probably he is correct in saying that "the division certainly done some wonderful work, all right." Judging from the new Jimsey, back from the Argonne, it did.

Better Cows as a Solution of the Milk Problem

Holsteins, Jerseys, Guernseys, and Ayrshires Give Twice as Much and Eat No More, Nor Are All the Fine Dairy Farms Owned by City Dwellers

By F. J. WILSTACH.

ABOUT all that the average city dweller knows about the breeding of fine cattle is confined to the cream pitcher which is placed before him at breakfast, or the glass bottle which he sees in front of his door, in the case of flat dwellers, in the morning. In point of fact there has grown up in the United States an enormous industry devoted to the improvement in the breed of the milch cow. Men of wealth all over the country have gone into this industry and have invested enormous sums in pure-bred cattle. Many a poor boy who has come to the metropolis to make his way, and who has succeeded, has harkened back to his days on a farm where the breed of milch cows was too often of a negative quality.

It is these men, particularly, who have with the keenest interest engaged in the enterprise. Every one of these grown-up farmer boys has become aware of the fact that it costs as much to feed a scrub cow as it does to feed a pedigreed cow, which will give double the amount of milk. The average production of a scrub cow is 3,000 pounds a year, while pure breeds give from 7,000 to 30,000 pounds. These breeders, having learned this fact, have gone about teaching it to the farmer. It is their hope that by improving the breed of milch cows there will be produced a higher percentage of butter fat in the milk and so in time the cost of milk to the consumer will be decreased.

Of course, all of the important dairy farms are not conducted or owned by well-to-do men residing in the cities. The county fairs, agricultural exhibits, and dairy cow shows have been productive of various advantages. And, too, the farmer cannot, after a visit to a live-stock show, have much respect for his bunch of scrub cows.

After all, when you see a herd of cows in the field, each one as lean as a vegetarian's cat, you know pretty well there is the wrong kind of a farmer behind them, but when you see a herd of finely bred cattle, each one as fat and sleek as plenty, you know the kind of a farmer who is bossing the cows.

In the United States alone there are over twenty-three million dairy cows, producing eighty-nine billion pounds of milk, and it is stated authoritatively that not one-half of them are on a profitable basis. This yield is not sufficient to produce one full glass of milk per capita a day. Nineteen per cent. of all food eaten in the United States comes from the dairy cow. The average yield per cow is 3,800 pounds annually, and if it were not for the pure-bred cows the average would not be over 1,000 pounds per head. There are about six million three hundred thousand farms in the country, and there has been invested in the dairy industry in the neighborhood of eight billion dollars. The product of this industry is about three billion dollars a year.

The breeders of fine cattle compute that the price of milk will be brought down when the 1,800,000 scrub cattle, which do not produce enough milk, or rich enough milk, to pay for their keep, have been replaced by pure-bred, profitable stock.

The four most popular breeds of high-class stock are the Holstein, the Jersey, the Guernsey, and the Ayrshire. It has been computed that in the country there are of these breeds, 40,000 breeders of pure-bred Holstein, 30,000 Jersey breeders, 5,000 Guernsey breeders, and 2,000 Ayrshire breeders. There are three minor breeds, which have not yet come into particular popularity, the same being the Brown Swiss, the Milking Shorthorn, and the Dexter Kerry. These various pure-bred herds represent an investment of over three hundred million dollars. It is stated on high authority that of the milk cows of the country, but 1¼ per cent. of the dairy cattle population are pure breds.

At all the farms devoted to the breeding of pure-blood cattle a careful record is kept of the milk-giving output of each cow. These records are kept under Government direction. The cow holding the record for the Holstein is Rolo Mercena De Kol. She is owned by J. B. Hamner of Norwich, Ontario, Canada. The best Jersey record is held by Vive La France. This cow produced 14,425 pounds of milk and 1,031 pounds of butterfat in a year. The best record for a Guernsey is held by Murne Cowan. Her record for a year was 24,008 pounds of milk and 1,098.18 pounds of fat. This cow is owned by the Anna Dean Farm, Barbertown, Ohio. The best record for an Ayrshire is held by Garclough day Mischief. In one year she produced 25,328 pounds of milk and 1,056 pounds of butter. She is owned by the Penshurst Farm, Narbeth, Penn.

The prices paid for the highly-bred cows of the four popular varieties holding unusual records for the giving of large quantities of milk and butter fat have of late times soared into enormous figures. The highest price paid for a Holstein was for Segis Hengerveld Fayne Johanna. She brought $40,000 at the dispersal sale of the Pine Grove Farm and was purchased by Dold Brothers of Buffalo, N. Y. The highest price paid for a Jersey cow was $10,099 for Sophie's Agnes, sold by the Hood Farm, Lowell, Mass., to the Ayredale Farm, Bangor, Me. Among the Guernseys the highest price that has been given for a single cow was for Follyland Nancy, $12,500 purchased by Anderson T. Herd, Herdlea Farm, New Hope, Penn. She was purchased from J. L. Hope, Madison, N. J. The highest price paid for an Ayrshire was $4,200, paid for Pansy's Daughter. She was sold by South Farm, Willoughby Ohio, to G. S. Mawhinney, Chatham, N. Y.

Highly bred bulls of these breeds have brought astonishing figures. The highest price paid for a Holstein bull was $106,000 for Carnation King Sylvia, purchased by the Carnation Stock Farm, Carnation, Wash., at the Milwaukee sale, June 9, 1918. The best price paid for a Jersey bull was for Imp. Golden Fern's Noble, purchased for $25,000 by the Brookwood Farms, Barryville, N. Y., from J. L. Perree, Island of Jersey. Anderson T. Herd of the Herdlea Farm, New Hope, Penn., who paid the highest price so far for a Guernsey cow, received $25,000 at the national Guernsey consignment sale at the Florham Farm, Madison, N. J., on May 15 for the two-month-old Guernsey bull Florham Leader. Despite the youthfulness of Florham Leader, the price paid was the highest given for a Guernsey bull. Seven thousand five hundred dollars was the highest price ever paid for an Ayrshire bull, the same being for Penshurst Musclief Maxer, sold by Penshurst Farm to Grant B. Schley, New York.

All these various breeds, the Holstein, the Jersey, the Guernsey, and the Ayrshire, have national associations and give special shows of their breeds in all parts of the country each year. While there is open rivalry between each of these breeds there is an intense rivalry between each breeder in the production of the finest type of dairy cow. The intensity of this rivalry is proved by the constant importation of the best representatives of the various breeds abroad, and the enormous prices paid for the best representative of each breed in this country.

The three hundred millions invested in pedigreed dairy stock represents but a small part of the investment. There are in the United States 75,000 farms devoted exclusively to the breeding of high-bred dairy cows, sprinkled over the length and breadth of the country. The cattle on these farms, many of them being palatial estates, are conducted with scientific accuracy. The feeding and housing of the cattle is engaged in with as great a care and precision as one may discover in an adequately conducted hospital. The results have influenced the nearby farmer, serving to produce more and more every year a betterment in the crae and breed of dairy cattle and the general wiping out of unprofitable scrub cattle.

With all the enormous efforts that have been put forth by the big breeders the grand prize for the world's champion butter fat producer was won by a cow belonging to a Canadian farm boy, J. B. Hamner, who is now in his twenty-second year. The name of his cow which won the grand prize is Rolo Mercena DeKol. Her record was made three months after calving and she tops all records from one to thirty days, the figures based on the 80 per cent. fat basis being: Butter, one day, 8.57 pounds; seven days, 51.93 pounds; thirty days, 200.34 pounds.

Considering the princely sums that have been invested by wealthy breeders, it is a matter of interest to note that the dam of Rolo Mercena DeKol was purchased for $25.50, and her first calf was the world's record cow. Her sire, Sir Rolo Banks Mercena, was purchased for a small sum, and thought so little of that he was sent to the butcher at an early age.

That the small farmer need not despair of equaling the records of big establishments is further proved by the fact that young Hamner also made a record of 30.33 pounds of fat, or 519.9 pounds of milk, with a 3-year-old heifer, Alva Spofford, for which he paid $117 less than a year ago. Alva Spofford's record is the best Canadian record for that age. Young Hamner, finding that Alva Spofford was such a wonderful producer, immediately purchased her dam, Alva Lassie, with a two months' old heifer calf, and made 25.34 pounds of fat from 427 pounds of milk.

Finally, the average yield of milk of this country could be doubled without the addition of a single head of stock by the use of cattle of the best quality on the farms. Not more, but better, owns is the new slogan.

gap in the Construction Corps. Wrote he naively, "It occurred to me one day that the United States needed more naval constructors for her ships. Hence," &c. No doubt the suffering Government will avail itself of his services.

Another, after vainly beating about for some time in a mental fog, finally anchored his ship of thought to the following lucid proposition: "Being unable to financially go to any excellent college, I became finally at last convinced that the Naval Academy was the place for me." It is to be hoped that before this youth becomes a grizzled Admiral he will be able to express himself with more conciseness.

"As for me, I thirsted for power," declared one; and, indeed, the possibility of enjoying at some future time the relation of superior to inferior was a delectable notion to several. One came because he could find nothing better to do. He has probably found something to do and plenty of it by this time, for Virgil's phrase ferret opus aptly describes the midshipman's daily life. One member of the class confessed to the thing that undid Caesar: "I came," he said, "because I was ambitious." Let him beware the Ides of Februaries. Another, evidently speaking from experience, for he has twice fallen back into the entering class, acknowledged that "he liked the life and the opportunity offered." Surely there is nothing like being satisfied with one's lot in life. Another came as a last resort. "I had tried several other things without success," he wrote, "and so I thought I would try this." His examination paper, be it remarked in passing, seemed to indicate a leaning toward his usual fatality.

Rivalry with a friend stirred another, for he wrote: "I came here mainly to beat out a friend at West Point." Perhaps he will do so, but unless his friend at West Point is uncommonly slow it is likely to be a stern chase. One who seemed to take an aristocratic view of the situation blandly wrote: "I came because I wanted to become an officer and a gentleman. It is an established fact that the best men in the country are in the army and the navy." Alas for those luckless millions who are not!

Alas, too, for the narrow and selfish reasons that move so many young men in the choice of their life work! Money, power, self-aggrandisement, passing whims—these seem to be compelling motives. Accordingly, it is refreshing to read on the paper of one quiet, studious boy the following simple statement: "I came to help my mother." It is safe to assume that a boy who comes to the Naval Academy for any such reason will, after graduation, become an ornament to the naval service.

What, now, is the end of all this? Nothing very definite. We cannot prove anything by statistics, we are sometimes told, and we cannot change human nature much by pointing a moral in public print. All that might be written on this subject from now until the crack of doom would not much affect those anxious youth who year after year steer their courses toward this institution. They will continue to come for motives just as frivolous, with ideals just as noble, as those found in this set of examination papers. How was it the poet so finely expressed it years ago?

A boy's will is the wind's will
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts.

Houses of Presidents

IN connection with the efforts to restore the birthplace of Theodore Roosevelt, at 28 East Twentieth Street, it is recalled that an attempt was made several years ago to acquire the old house in which President James Monroe died. The project never got beyond the placing in 1905 of a memorial tablet on the house.

The old house, one of the archaic structures in the city, and much the worse through years of neglect, is on the northwest corner of Lafayette and Prince Streets. For years the lower portion was used as a junkshop. It still presents the characteristics of the well-to-do residence during the early part of the last century—three stories high, with dormer windows protruding from the attic. The house was built by Samuel L. Gouverneur, who married one of Monroe's daughters.

IBANEZ DENOUNCES FRUIT OF THE VINE

"La Bodega" an Indictment of Wine Drinking in Spain—Religious Problem in Mr. Galsworthy's New Novel—Latest Works of Fiction

LA BODEGA (THE FRUIT OF THE VINE). By Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Translated from the Spanish by Isaac Goldberg. Authorized American edition. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

THE Spanish novelist wrote "La Bodega," and it appeared in Spain sixteen years ago. But if it had just come from his pen it could not have a more timely interest for American readers, to whom it is now presented for the first time. For it deals with a question that is this Summer being hotly debated all over the United States, that is filling columns upon columns in the newspapers and is arousing much keen feeling in every part of the country. In the same dispassionate, critical way in which Ibanez studied the national sport of bull-fighting and its influence upon the Spanish populace in "Blood and Sand" and turned his attention to the effect of a tyrannical religion embedded in a monarchical State in "The Shadow of the Cathedral," so in "La Bodega" he embodies in story form the results of his study of the universal habit of wine drinking upon the Spanish people of both high and low degree, but especially upon the very poor.

It must be said at the very start that those who are demanding the exemption of "light wines and beer" from the prospective constitutional amendment concerning alcoholic drinks will get no backing and no comfort, so far as wines are concerned, from this novel. And as for those who are fond of referring to the wine-drinking nations of Europe as proof that the custom is wholesome and desirable, Señor Ibanez's novel points an accusing finger at them that says "You lie!" as plainly as if it were printed in capital letters upon every page. The story is painted upon a broad and crowded canvas with great and varied detail and the spirit of "The Fruit of the Vine" moves here and there and everywhere among the mingling groups, and wherever it passes there are drunken and shameless orgies, the wealth of the prosperous is dissipated, the poor become more wretched and debased and shame and sorrow follow in its footsteps. It is difficult to put into English the full and exact meaning which Ibanez has given to his simple title, which he has made richly symbolical, although Mr. Goldberg has done fairly well by it with his explanatory subtitle, "The Fruit of the Vine." In some Spanish-speaking countries a "bodega" is any sort of warehouse, but in the part of Spain—Andalusia—where this story is located it appears to signify only a shed, or cellar, or warehouse in which wine is stored. And Ibanez sees this wine shed or warehouse with its tiers upon tiers of casks or bottles as a mighty, sinister Presence striking its roots deep into the soil, breathing destruction, and with its heavy hand crushing the poor and helpless into deeper misery. And yet there is no more propaganda against wine-drinking in the work than there is against bull-fighting in "Blood and Sand." The story merely makes a careful, realistic, judicial study of the lives, the conditions, and the unfolding relations of several large groups of people in a winemaking district.

The scene of the story is Southeastern Spain, not far from Cadiz, and the action takes place in and around the City of Jerez de la Frontera, which, some centuries ago, when it was spelled with an "X" which was pronounced "Sh," gave its name to sherry. Central in interest is the great winemaking and wine-dealing house of Dupont, with its wide-spreading vineyards, its bodegas filling an entire section of the city and its agencies scattered all over Europe. Nearly all of the characters are in some way connected with this huge commercial enterprise, upon vineyard or farm, or in wine sheds or offices, or related to the head of the firm. As in most of Ibanez's fiction the interest inheres more in the delineation of the characters and their influence upon one another than it does in the development of the story. And this novel is particularly rich in its character portrayal. Among its people is a man, the Marquis de San Dionisio, who bears a curious resemblance to the cynical, old, hard-riding Spanish South American ranchman of "The Four Horsemen" in the riotous virility of his primitive nature. He has developed, however, not on wide and lonely pampas in grim combat with nature and animals, but cushioned by luxury in the land of the vine. Till death overtakes him he races at furious speed from orgy to orgy with a hullabaloo that greatly entertains the city and the countryside, and his two daughters carry on the family reputation with almost as much energy as their father had shown. In striking contrast is the revolutionary agitator, Salvatierra, a wandering, hovering, elusive figure of ascetic habits, deeply beloved by all who have been associated with him. Every now and then he appears, a pale, cold flame like some flitting will-o'-the-wisp, but always in his wake unrest stirs in the breasts of the wretched and there are attempts at revolt, pitiful in their futility. Salvatierra is the only one of the book's scores of characters of every social and economic grade who refuses to drink even the mildest wine. In his eyes "the wine warehouse was the modern counterpart of the feudal fortress that held the masses in slavery and abjection," and he "cursed the power that alcoholic poison wielded over the people, transmitting its evil from generation to generation."

There is much realistic description of the appalling misery in which the wretched laborers, men, women, and children, on vineyard and farm toil through weary day after day and sleep like animals in the promiscuous association of their quarters. The food served them is barely enough to keep life in their bodies, and in this half-starved condition "they dream of wine, beholding in it the strength of their existence, the delight of their thoughts." "The glass of wine stills hunger and with its fire for a moment gladdens life." There is one rich employer, cousin of the head of the great house of Dupont, who is a roystering young person, a patron of bullfighters, and delighting in madcap and strenuous forms of vinous exhilaration. It gives him the greatest pleasure to gather in the wretched laborers and craze or stupefy them upon the choicest and most expensive wine in the firm's bodegas. It is one of these mad pranks, when he has succeeded in making drunk not only the laborers but the overseer's household and all the guests with wine from the precious bottles, that results in the tragic climax of the personal phase of the story. But intertwined with the personal interests is another that is more abstract, although it seems to hold for the author a keener interest. For in the shocking labor conditions and the drunkenness of the region he feels the concern of the reformer and the revolutionary that he is, first of all. And he brings that interest to its climax at the end of the book in a disastrous attempt at revolt that is grim with its mocking ironies. And afterward the sinister hand of "La Bodega" crushes the poor wretches down more masterfully than before.

In some respects Ibanez's material and methods in this story recall those of Zola in "Germinal," but the work is written with a keener sense of the artistic value of contrasts and with a stronger story-telling purpose, and, consequently, more recourse to dramatic situations and developments. Señor Ibanez has a lively poetic imagina-

REPRODUCING FOR MODERN PLAYGOERS THE OPEN-AIR THEATRE OF CLASSIC TIMES

By BRANDER MATTHEWS

THE OPEN-AIR THEATRE. By Sheldon Cheney. New York: Mitchell Kennerley. 168 pp. $3.

TO every lover of the dramatic art it is a matter of surprised delight that the interest in plays and in players and in playhouses is constantly increasing, and nowhere more vigorously than in the United States. Our weekly and monthly magazines are continually inserting theatrical articles, which are often only frivolous letter press concocted to carry portraits of pretty actresses, but which are also not infrequently serious discussions of one or another manifestation of the drama. And nothing like this characterized either the American or the British magazines of fifty years ago, in which papers on either players or playwrights were rarely seen, and when seen were more often than not painfully uninspired.

I recall that more than forty years ago, when I offered my first contribution to Harper's—it was an account of the admirable company of the Théâtre Français—the editor returned it to me regretfully, with the courteous explanation that the magazine never had published any article on the stage and that it could not break with its traditions by accepting a paper on a Parisian playhouse. Harper's, I am glad to record, soon experienced a change of heart; and within a decade it contained many articles dealing with actors and actresses, including one by Coquelin, illustrated by portraits of the chief members of the Comédie Française.

Not the least significant of the evidences of the growth of popular interest in the drama is the recent multiplication of open-air theatres, sometimes merely temporary grand stands to seat the spectators at the performance of a pageant and sometimes solid and beautiful structures of marble. Some of these permanent playhouses in the open air are modifications of the garden theatres of the Italian villas; and some of them are avowedly modeled upon the hillside auditoriums of the Greeks. In the present volume Mr. Cheney has accumulated a gallery of photographs of outdoor theatres from all parts of Europe and America. He has gratified our eyes with views of the lovely forest vista wherein the Bohemian Club of San Francisco performs its indigenous "grove plays," and he has companioned this by several plans and pictures of the neighboring imitation of a Greek theatre on the grounds of the University of California. He presents photographs of one or another of the garden theatres in Italy and of their more recent rivals in America, some of them within commuting distance from New York. He gives us sketches of a beautiful structure at Warsaw and of less ambitious structures near Lucerne, in the Harz Mountains, and not far from Copenhagen. He has pictures of the so-called Water Theatre at Versailles, and of the ornate amphitheatre in the Boboli Gardens of Florence.

If Mr. Cheney's volume were far less adequate than it is it would be welcome if only for its illustrations. But it is not fairly to be called inadequate, although it is only a small book on a large subject. And its author modestly proffers it as a preliminary essay in a field which he hopes will attract new students, "and which doubtless will find its exhaustive historian in the future." Whatever the deficiencies of Mr. Cheney's discussion his little book has the compelling charm of youthful enthusiasm. But "we are none of us infallible—not even the youngest of us," as the wise elder once said to a dogmatic youngster. And Mr. Cheney reveals here and there that he has not always digested his information, and that he has not always succeeded in freeing himself from the entanglements of contradictory theories.

It may be well to catalogue a few of the petty slips which reveal themselves to a captious critic. For example, on his very first page Mr. Cheney tells us that "the glories of the age of Shakespeare in England came when the drama again had left the roofed-in places, developing and flowering on stages open to the sky." Now, from the time when the mystery play was thrust out of the Church, and when its separate "stations" were transferred to pageant wagons, the Tudor drama developed out of doors, in the open, abiding in "roofed-in places" (Town Halls and the like) only infrequently and casually. Even the later morality play was performed in a "round"—that is, in an open field—more often than not, and Mr. Cheney might have given us the contemporary diagram of the five elevated "stations" prescribed for the proper presentation of "The Castle of Constancy" in a grass-grown arena.

Then, again, on his second page, Mr. Cheney ventures to assert that "finally the art of Aeschylus and Sophocles and Euripides flowered in the beautiful architectural theatres of Athens." This seems to suggest, first, that there was more than one theatre in Athens at the time when the Attic drama flourished; and, second, that the theatre of Dionysius had become architecturally beautiful when the art of Aeschylus flowered—a suggestion unsupported by any evidence. Indeed, there is now little doubt that when the "Agamemnon" was originally produced, the spectators massed tier on tier on the curving hillside of the Acropolis, either stretched themselves out on the ground or were seated on rude wooden benches.

When we come to Mr. Cheney's third page we find the dogmatic declaration that "at first the mystery plays were acted on the church steps and then on platforms in the churchyard." I do not think that there is any warrant for this; indeed, I believe that we may take it as a definite fact that the complete mystery play was evolved in the church itself, and that it remained there until the performance became too heavy a burden for the ecclesiastic authorities, who turned it out and transferred the control to the guilds. In France a special guild, the Brotherhood of the Passion, took charge; and it probably presented the play on a long, shallow platform directly in front of the church—the platform being adorned with the necessary "stations," placed side by side, as we see them in the Valenciennes illumination. In England, the trade guilds set the several "stations" on ambulatory pageant wagons, the acting taking place partly on these floats and partly in the street.

There is no need to go through Mr. Cheney's volume, page by page, with a microscope certain to magnify his minor faults of omission and commission. Yet it is advisable to dwell a little on the chapter devoted to the Greek theatre. Mr. Cheney admits that the question as to whether the Attic theatre had or had not an elevated stage is "a matter of vigorous controversy among archaeologists"; and he records that Dörpfeld's contention—that the Attic theatre had no stage of any kind, and that all the acting took place in the circular orchestra—"is gradually finding wide acceptance among scholars." In spite of this apparent approval of Dörpfeld's views, Mr. Cheney is constantly using words which imply the existence of a stage in the Greek theatre. Now, it is possible that the question whether or not there was an elevated stage in the theatre of Dionysius cannot be definitely answered by archaeologists and by scholars, since the evidence, architectural and literary, is not decisive. But it is a question to be answered without difficulty by any theatrical expert, by any student of the development of the drama and of the evolution of the playhouse, by any one familiar with the varied aspects of the show business. And the answer which such a student has to proffer seems to me conclusive.

When the public has to be addressed by a single artist and when it has to be interested by a company of actors one of two things necessarily happens and only one of them can happen at the same time. Either the performer is elevated on

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

SEVERAL volumes by Samuel Gompers will be published during the Summer and Autumn by E. P. Dutton & Co. In the late Fall they expect to bring out his autobiography, and as he has been, with the exception of one year, President of the American Federation of Labor ever since 1882 the work will, presumably, cover almost the entire course of the modern labor movement with intimate familiarity. But much earlier, probably in September, they will have ready two volumes of Mr. Gompers's writings and addresses compiled and edited by Hayes Robbins, who has long been connected with the labor movement and is in close association with Mr. Gompers. The first volume, under the title of "Labor and the Common Welfare," will deal with the philosophy of trade unionism, labor's relation to the community, Government and law, its viewpoint on national and civic issues, its share in modern progress and organized labor's challenge to socialism, the I. W. W., and Bolshevism. The second volume, to be called "Labor and the Employer," will include topics dealing with the historic, philosophic, and practical relations between employer and employed. Mr. Gompers is the author of "Labor in Europe and America," published nearly ten years ago, and of many pamphlets on various phases of the labor question.

The first collection of miscellaneous short stories by William J. Locke will be published the middle of next month by the John Lane Company under the title, "Far-Away Stories."

"Ireland's Fight for Freedom," by George Creel, is announced for immediate publication by the Harpers.

Arthur Train's novel "The Earthquake" has been translated and published in France under the title "L'Amerique et la Secousse de la Guerre."

"The Education of Henry Adams" has led the list of nonfiction best sellers for the whole country in every month since January. It received the Columbia University Pulitzer prize of $1,000 for the best biography published in the United States in 1918.

Ellis Parker Butler will next Fall make a tour of the country, giving readings from his humorous works.

Early next season Henry Holt & Co. will publish a new work by Romain Rolland, a romantic historical novel to be called "Colas Brugnon" and scened in mediaeval Burgundy.

The Harpers have sold translation rights of President Wilson's "The Life of George Washington" to the Dutch publishing house of Rembrandt, who will publish it in Holland, and will also bring it out in a German translation for sale in Germany.

G. F. Nicolai's "The Biology of War" has been translated and published in six languages, and the famous professor, after four years of persecution by the German Government, has been reinstated in his Chair of Physiology at the University of Berlin.

Six thousand sets of Everyman's Cyclopaedia were placed by the War Library Service of the American Library Association in the libraries of camps, hospitals, warships, headquarters offices, and elsewhere, the compact form of the work making it suitable for such uses because of the space conserved.

At the end of this week the Century Company will publish a timely book on "Self-Government in the Philippines," by Maximo M. Kalaw, who is said to base his plea for independence upon his presentation of what has been already achieved by the Filipinos in education, social and political development and in industry.

For publication this week the Century Company announces "Inventions of the Great War," by A. Russell Bond, managing editor of The Scientific American; "What Is America?" by Edward Alsworth Ross; "The Politics of Industry," by Glenn Frank, and "Textbook of Applied Aeronautical Engineering," by Henry Woodhouse.

Percy MacKaye and Harry Barnhart, the successful leader of community singing, are working out plans to have the great outdoor singing crowds of eight to ten thousand persons which Mr. Barnhart leads learn to chant poetry. Some of Walt Whitman's poems have been selected for the first experiment, which will take place on Sunday night, July 13, in Central Park. One of the selections will be "O Captain, My Captain!"

"If a publisher did not speak well of his book, who would," said Betty by way of comment on the Sunday Literary Supplement. "If one believed all the publishers said—," she began. "There's one ad you missed," I interrupted. "It's in this issue on page 3—the part you dropped on the floor." I watched her face as her eye swept the page. Suddenly it was caught and an interested smile parted her lips. After a moment she read aloud:

IN SECRET, by Robert W. Chambers. Seven persons, four men and three women, read this book before publication. They agreed that it was one of the pleasantest literary cocktails likely to be mixed in this year of the great drouth. Our faith in this judgment led us to put to press a first edition of 50,000 copies. The response of the trade was such that a printing of 450,000 color post cards and booklets are being distributed from coast to coast to carry to summer readers the news of the unusual thing Chambers has done in this book. We feel that it is a conservative statement to say that the thousands who turn to books for recreation and refreshment will find "In Secret" hard to match for its blending of mystery and action in New York with romance and adventure in the great woods. We must apologize for a delay in publication. It is impossible to prevent those who do the printing and binding of a book from reading for pleasure as they work—if the book is specially appealing. And there is a certain printing shop in New York where "In Secret" has been read by 102% of the employees (a man and a girl read it twice!). No publisher has the heart to complain of this. In fact, he would be entirely happy about it if the wheels did not slow up.

Betty's face wore a broad grin as she looked up. "That is certainly a most fetching announcement." And then, with a quizzical look: "You appear guilty—are you implicated in this? Are you one of the seven?" "No," I said, "I'm not, honor bright. But I do know something of the book, because I had a good deal to do with getting it in the movies. Pearl White is to star in it this summer." "Pearl White!" exclaimed Betty. "Really? Then the book must have a plot that buzzes like a Liberty motor. When am I to have a copy?" "Never from me," I said. "Once you got your nose in 'In Secret,' I'd not have a word out of you for a day—and that's much too much of silence," I added firmly. "Brute!" said Betty. "I suppose I may buy a copy—with my own money?" "You may," I said. "Messrs. Scribner, Dutton, Wanamaker, Putnam, Brentano—any of them will supply you gladly for $1.50 in copper, silver or Liberty Bonds. But take a tip from me," I warned. "I may or I may not," said Betty. "What is it?" "Don't start IN SECRET and expect to sleep between chapters. I know your habits." "Don't worry," said Betty. "With Pearl White and Robert W. Chambers, I'd sit up for a gallop to the tape. Besides," she added, "that ad alone is worth the price of admission. Who ever heard of seven readers agreeing!" "They didn't," I said. "The point is that none of them could be induced to give up the MS until he had finished it. And then the compositors and printers began reading it to one another. It's a miracle the book was ever printed." "You know," said Betty, with a meditative eye on me, "whoever wrote that ad missed his calling. He should have been with Barnum." "Then IN SECRET doesn't interest you?" I inquired. "Not in the least," said Betty. And then, calling after me as I opened the door: "Will you order it for me as you go downtown?"

FIFTH AVE. AT 48ST. NEW YORK

La Bodega

(The Fruit of the Vine)

An intense and brilliant picture of the effect upon the workers of Spain of the national traffic in wine. Through a story of love and struggle, jealousy and vengeance, we see in a sympathetic light the lives both of the peasantry of the vineyards, and the town workers in the factories. The book throbs with the stirring of the modern spirit of unrest and aspiration. It is rich in color and is generally rated as one of the best works by the most intensely vigorous and vitalizing novelist of our time.

LATEST WORKS OF FICTION

...es, and he has given it in this story freer rein, a freer rein, indeed, than he accorded in either "The Shadow of the Cathedral" or "Blood and Sand," which are the only other volumes of his series of novels upon important public questions that have yet been published in this country. As in both of those, he writes with comprehensive knowledge, with vigor and directness, and with no mincing of words, but always with a certain judicial quality apparent in his scrupulous presentation of all sides of his theme. The story is less impassioned than is "The Four Horsemen," and its narrative moves with less fervor and somewhat less forcefulness. But it tells a moving and pitiful tale and its backgrounds are rich and full and vivid. After one has read it one knows the Andhlusian countryside, city, and people as if one had lived there.

The assault of the book is not solely upon wine-drinking and drunkenness, for the author has made an intertwined target of that vice and of the economic and social conditions which propertied interests strive to continue. And at the end he allows his socialist agitator, Salvatierra, to indulge in a dream of success and an apostrophe to the social revolution in which, "with faith and hope," notwithstanding his grief over the wine-drinking peasants, he sees the "flocks of sad unfortunates" in the cities who would lead the way to industrial freedom because they would repel "the false solace of wine."

SAINT'S PROGRESS

IT is a commonplace of young people to speak of "the gulf between the generations," as if that were something quite simple, a general fact to be accepted as a matter of course by parents and children everywhere. And yet, that it is far from simple, that in its universality it touches different people in many different ways, that it is one of the great, complex, sometimes heartbreaking, dramas of our human lives, we must realize if we stop to think. In "Saint's Progress" John Galsworthy has made a great novel on that theme, yet not on that theme alone; for the thing is irreducible to terms of bare simplicity; it is not inability to recall their own youth that separates parents from their children; it is changing philosophies, new-grown ideals, the conflict of faiths. In Edward Pierson's life, this problem of faith is literally one of religious belief, of revelation, interpretation, authority. A man who loves his fellow-men and spends his life in the effort to serve them, a father who would make every sacrifice for the children he adores, a man utterly unworldly, whom all who know him love and call a saint, he finds himself unable to meet his daughters' needs or to draw close to men as brothers. This is the theme of "Saint's Progress," a story intensely human, intensely interesting, deeply sympathetic, set against the background of English life in wartime.

And in the consideration of this new novel of Galsworthy's, we must see it in all these aspects—as a study of the cleavage between youth and the parent generation; as a setting forth of the problem of authoritative religion—of the Church—in a struggling, scientific, empirical world; as a picture of the war's effect upon society. It need scarcely be pointed out that "Saint's Progress" is a very beautiful book, and that Mr. Galsworthy's contribution to our study of these problems is something individual and distinct.

Edward Pierson is a clergyman, vicar of a large London parish, where he has worked very hard for many years, and where now, because his curate has gone as a Chaplain, he is doing two men's hard work instead of that of one. He is a man who loves God in all the beauty of His handiwork, the scents and stars and bird songs of the English country, and the music that men have made:

> He had a fine touch, and played with a sort of dreamy passion, losing himself completely. It was his way out of perplexities, regrets, and longings; a way which never quite failed him.
> Once on a time, at Cambridge, he had intended to take up music as a profession, and why he had not done so he never to this day quite understood. Family tradition had destined him for Holy Orders, and a certain emotional church revival of that day had caught him in its stream. He had always had private means, and those early years before he married had passed happily in an East End parish. To have not only opportunity but power to help in the lives of the poor had been fascinating; simple himself, the simple folk of his parish had taken hold of his heart. When, however, he fell in love and married Agnes Heriot, he was given a parish of his own on the borders of East and West, and there he had been ever since, even after her death had nearly killed him. It was better to go on there work and all reminded him of whom he had resolved never to forget in other ties. But he was often conscious that his work had not the zest it used to have in her day, or even before her day. It may well be doubted whether he, who had been in Holy Orders twenty-six years, quite knew now what he believed. Everything had become set, circumscribed, and fixed, by thousands of his own utterances; to have taken fresh stock of his faith, to have gone deep into its roots, would have been like taking up the foundations of a still-standing house. Some men naturally root themselves in the inexpressible—and one formula for the inexpressible is much the same as another, but Edward Pierson, gently dogmatic, undoubtedly preferred the High-Church statement of the inexpressible to that, say, of the Zoroastrians. The subtleties of change, the modifications by science, ever impinging on even the most inspired dogmas, left little sense of inconsistency or treason on his soul. Sensitive, charitable, and only combative deep down, he instinctively avoided discussion on matters where he might hurt others or they hurt him. And, since explanation was the last thing which could be expected of one who did not base himself on reason, he had found but scant occasion ever to examine anything.
> To his two daughters, babies when their mother died, he had tried to be father and mother both, and between him and his children the tie of affection and tenderness was, on both sides, singularly deep. But he who "did not base himself on reason," who rarely examined anything, was only hurt and perplexed by Gratian's constant pitiless demand for "the truth"; and, drawing more and more into himself, set aside from men by his position of sanctity and authority, struggling with and denying human passions within him, he was utterly unable, fifteen years after his wife's death, to enter into eighteen-year-old Noel's eager desire for what she vaguely called "life." That Gratian is unable any longer to share his own beliefs, he is inclined to set down to the influence of the brilliant but "materialistic" surgeon whom she has married. Noel's young existence he feels that he must guide and govern; and when she announces her determined wish to marry a young army officer whom she has only known for a few weeks, his sense of the gravity and eternity of marriage makes such a demand seem almost sacrilege.
> The incidents of the novel are very largely concerned with Noel, who is not permitted to marry Cyril Moriand before he goes to the war, and who, reckless, headstrong, passionately in love, loses sight of everything save the feeling that they must "belong to each other forever" before the soldier goes out to face the German guns. He never comes back. To Edward Pierson, who cares nothing for the world's opinion, and everything for his child's righteousness and forgiveness before God, Noel and her baby bring a cruel and complex tragedy into life.
> In the unnaturalness, the "forcing-house"—as one of the characters calls it—of London existence in 1916, Mr. Galsworthy shows us a group of people with widely differing experiences, philosophies, ideas. There is a young Belgian painter to whom life is "an artist expressing himself in millions of ever-changing forms." There is the able and thoughtful young scientist who can never meet Pierson, deeply as he loves him, without getting into an argument on faith and immortality and the meaning of the universe. There is the kind and honest but somewhat battered middle-aged man who loves Noel, and there is the woman to whom love has always been everything, and who sees love passing with the passing of youth. There is Noel herself, and Gratian, and there are others, all with integral parts in the picture.
> It is a picture of exquisite artistry, to move the heart, to stir one with its beauty and its love of the beauty of the earth, to challenge one's thought, and to leave one at last, not with the solution of any problem, but with a deepened sense of the need of sympathy in our complex lives, of kindness and brotherliness and tenderness.

VALIANT BROTHERS

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. By Ben Ames Williams. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

MR. WILLIAMS is a new aspirant for favor in the ranks of the novelists, but with his first book he has scored two distinct hits. For he has devised a quaintly original and curiosity-provoking title and he has written a yarn of adventure at sea that is as fresh and crisp, as clear and bright as a water color painting. His title is the epitaph that is written down in the Log Book of the House of Shore when the entry closes for one after another of the brothers. When the story opens, Matthew and Mark, John and Joel, have all played the parts of men, taking their whaling ships on three-year cruises and returning laden with oil. But Matthew and John have been claimed by the sea, and the entries that told of their fates a platform, the audience being on a lower level; or else the spectators are accommodated in seats rising row on row, while the performers remain on the lower level. The stumpspeaker stands on his cart to be heard by men who gather around him at the street corner; the preacher goes up into the pulpit, from which he can look down on the congregation in their pews on the floor of the church; the quack doctor and his jack-pudding provide themselves with a platform so that they can attract the attention of the crowd assembled in the market place; the screen of the moving picture is lifted aloft so as to be visible by all who sit or stand in the hall; and the actors in our theatres appear on a stage raised several feet above the floor on which are the chairs for the spectators. In all these instances the persons to be seen are elevated above the persons who are to see.

On the other hand, we have the flat race-track, with its grand stands enabling the visitors to survey the whole field; we have the flat baseball diamond, with its bleachers; we have the flat football gridiron, surrounded by the shelving sides of the Yale Bowl or the Harvard Stadium; we have the flat circus ring, single or triplicate, with tiers of seats rising all around it; we have the flat arena of the Coliseum, with its ascending circles of curving benches, supported by arched vaults, story above story. And in all these instances the persons who are to see are elevated above the persons who are to be seen.

Either of these methods will serve the purpose; but we must make our choice between them. We cannot employ both methods—or, at least, there would be no possible advantage in so doing; and we know that the Greeks were a very practical race, never forcing themselves to do the unprofitable and the unnecessary. Therefore, we may rest assured that the Attic theatre had no stage, since it would have been absolutely useless, as the spectators were accommodated with seats cut in the rock of the Acropolis or built in wood or in marble. They could look down on the orchestra as the fans at the Polo Grounds look down on the diamond; and it would never have occurred to the Athenians to segregate the actors from the chorus, with whom they were continually holding colloquy, and to hoist them up on a platform which would make this interchange of question and answer both difficult and awkward. It is a significant fact (although Mr. Cheney fails to mention it) that when the "Frogs" of Aristophanes was put in rehearsal in the Greek theatre of the University of California it was found that the business of the play could not be properly arranged until the actors were taken off the stage itself and were permitted to mingle freely with the chorus in the orchestra. Mr. Cheney does give us a picture of the Greek theatre at Bradfield College, with its stage less than two feet above the orchestra and connected with it by five steps extending along its whole front. And I can testify that at the performance of "Alcestis," which I had the pleasure of attending, the action of the play was shown in the orchestra, the actors rarely venturing up to the shallow stage, which was thus made to serve as the house of Admetus; that is to say, merely as a localized background.

Mr. Cheney is more fortunate in dealing with the outdoor theatres of the present than he is with those of the past. He lacks intimate acquaintance with the Greek drama, the mediaeval drama, and the Tudor drama, and we can feel that his interest in them is perfunctory, whereas his interest in the more modern development of the drama outdoors is genuine and contagious. As a result of this more spontaneous liking for the latter-day experiments, his remarks in regard to them are far more acute and suggestive. He is shrewd in pointing out that certain kinds of play cannot be performed to advantage in the open air. Ibsen's "Ghosts," for example, and all our other intimate and intense plays with highly concentrated action, seem to require the enforced attention imposed by the limiting walls and ceiling of the modern playhouse.

On the other hand, pieces less realistic, less direct, more fanciful, may even gain by transferal to the liberty of all outdoors. I have beheld "As You Like It" at least a score of times, but I have never been present at any more enjoyable performance than that given a few years ago under the trees which then crossed their branches over the South Field of Columbia University, where the School of Journalism now stands. Probably the "Faithful Shepherdess" of Fletcher and the "Shoemaker's Holiday" of Dekker would lose nothing of their essential quality when presented in one of the smaller outdoor theatres. Possibly the "Romantics" of Rostand, the "Pélléas and Mélisande" of Maeterlinck, and the "Prunella" of Granville Barker might even profit by a removal from the rigidity of our painted scenery and by a less restricted environment under the greenwood tree.

As every play is conditioned by the circumstances of the playhouse for which it was composed, the masterpieces of the Greek drama are most amply revealed when they are represented in a setting bearing as much resemblance as possible to the theatre of Dionysius. As it happens, I have had the good fortune to see four Greek plays, two of them, "Oedipus" and "Medea," in New York theatres and two others in the open air, "Agamemnon" in the Harvard Stadium and "Alcestis" at Bradfield College, and I can testify to the feeling that the two performances in the open appeared to have indisputable advantages, although neither of them was sustained by any acting at all comparable with that of Mounet-Sully and his supporting company in "Oedipus." Mr. Cheney might have quoted from Francisque Sarcey's account of the unforgettable impression made on him when the Comédie Française gave its first performance in the Roman Theatre at Orange; and he would also have found much that would have been useful to him in Gaston Boissier's enlightening essay on that mighty survival from the Roman rule in Gaul.

The drama was born out of doors, and the investigators into its ancestry tell us that the opera ballet of primitive man may have come into existence even before the acquisition of articulate speech. The song and dance and pantomime had been lifted into literature, and they had climbed to the topmost heights of poetry almost two thousand years before they were cribbed, cabined, and confined within walls and under a roof. Shakespeare and Lope de Vega wrote their plays for playhouses open to the sky; and Corneille and Molière are the earliest modern dramatists who worked for a theatre roofed and lighted and equipped with rudimentary scenery. If the outdoor theatre, of which Mr. Cheney is the enthusiastic prophet and the conscientious exponent, succeeds in establishing itself solidly and in winning the persistent approval of the public, perhaps it may in time find its Sophocles and its Shakespeare.

WHY PROHIBITION!

WHY PROHIBITION! By Charles Stelzle. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

The result of several years spent in making a first-hand, thoroughgoing study of the liquor question in all its aspects, Mr. Stelzle's book is packed with important facts and persuasive argument all going to show that commercially the liquor business is a blood-sucking parasite, industrially an expensive misfortune, and socially a poison that filters through the whole social body and demands a constant toll of lives, strength, efficiency, welfare, and money. There are chapters that marshal a great array of facts on how liquor drinking affects the length of life, on how much we spend for liquor, on just what kinds of jobs will be lost, and what they mean to society when the saloons are closed. Others consider with fact and argument why the saloon must go, what substitutes can be devised for the saloon, and how prohibition works in practice. Other chapters discuss such questions as personal liberty and prohibition, organized labor and the saloon, and taxation and compensation. As the result of a study of more than a thousand workingmen in several different cities, Mr. Stelzle found that of their spare cash—money not spent for the necessities of life—they paid out 34 per cent. for beer, wine, and whisky. He gives a table, taken from the statistical abstract, showing the number of gallons of spirits, wines, and malt liquors, with the amount per capita, consumed in the United States yearly from 1850 to 1917. The total per capita consumption increased from a little over four gallons in 1850 to 22.79 in 1911, then fell gradually to 19.4 in 1916.

The centring of public attention upon the great battle that is still to be fought out between the prohibitionists and the anti-prohibitionists, notwithstanding the success of the prohibition amendment, makes Mr. Stelzle's book one of very great interest and value. The public in general is much more familiar with the arguments of the other side of the question, and those who seriously want to consider both sides will find here all the contentions of the anti-prohibitionists squarely met, conscientiously considered and answered.

LATEST FICTION

each ended with the line, "All the brothers were valiant." Then Mark's ship comes home without him, his first mate saying he had left the vessel to go on shore on a South Sea island, had not returned, and after searching for him they had decided the natives had killed him. So Joel writes the last entry for him in the Log Book of the House of Shore and adds, "All the brothers were valiant." Then the owner puts him in command of the same ship, and with his young bride he sets out upon a three-year cruise. But he doubts that his brother is dead and steers his course for the island where Mark had disappeared. Then one morning, as they are anchored in the bay of another island to take on water, Mark climbs over the rail from a small boat, as big and laughing and insolent as ever.

He tells Joel the story of his adventures, a wild, reckless, bloody taking of hazards in which the elemental man in him had fought, and gambled with life, and rejoiced, and won through. On another island he had hidden the store of pearls, of which finally he had become the sole owner, and he proposes that they go thither and get them. But Joel, having a New England conscience and a sense of responsibility to the owner of the ship, refuses. And thereupon Mark provokes a mutiny, and there are exciting times in the cabin and a fight on the decks that is as good and swift and thrilling a fight for ship's mastery as one is likely to find in any recent tale of the sea. The story is notable as a first novel because of the clean-cut manner of its telling and the author's ability to impart an adequate sense of the personality of his characters in a few clear, colorful, telling strokes. Mark and Joel and Joel's bride, Priscilla, and Asa Worthen, the owner, and even those who do not appear on the scene but are described by Mark in the story of his adventures, stand out vividly against the sea and ship background, although the author seems to devote scant attention to any of them. He is economical of words, but he gets a more lasting effect, and his swiftly moving, well-told story is far more interesting than if he had used twice as many.

HIS WIFE'S JOB

HIS WIFE'S JOB. By Grace Sartwell Mason. Illustrated by Graham Coates. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

A VERY human story of wartimes, sympathetically told, and with a dash of restrained humor here and there that adds greatly to its charm. Also there is a moral lesson which would have had more point a year ago, when the war was on, than it conveys now. But that is no fault of the author's. The story originally appeared serially in a magazine, and at that period was more timely. With all that, the main thing is that here is an interesting sketch of contemporaneous life, with an exploitation of the part one woman played in wartimes while her husband was "over there." Roger Henderson, an average New York business man in his thirties, suddenly became tired of his daily routine, including the occupations of his pleasant little home, which comprised occasional bridge whist and other mild diversions. The inference is that he even wearied of his wife now and then, although she was a delightful young woman, who had been "lodged, fed, clothed and protected, admired, petted, and praised in the approved American fashion for twenty-six years," and was not destitute of native ability in various useful directions. Anyhow, one morning in 1917 Roger went to Plattsburg for army training, and Anne, the wife, found herself alone.

It was when Anne Henderson realized that she was practically a widow that she set about to do something for her own entertainment, as well as to earn money. So when, after a time, Roger was sent to France, she opened an establishment, in partnership with a friend, Marian Beal, which was called "The Shop of Precious Things," and was in the upper Fifth Avenue district. The two young women borrowed money to launch their business, and in due course found themselves in financial difficulties. This was new to Anne, who always had had everything she wanted in a modest way, with Roger to pay the bills.

After getting out of the "Precious Things" shop affair, Anne learned that there were other more important accomplishments for American women in wartimes. So when Roger, wounded, but not seriously, came back to New York, only to be sent back after the war to superintend reconstruction work in France, Anne was put on the American Committee and sailed with her husband. She had learned the lesson of patriotic efficiency, also that extravagance does not pay, while Roger, who probably had not appreciated his wife until he lay helpless in a base hospital, was inclined to think she was the finest woman in the world, after all. This is the inference. The exact words of the author which close the book are: "His partner! She felt, as she walked along beside him, as if they had discovered the secret rhythm of the world, and were moving joyously in touch with it." The four illustrations by Graham Coates are adequate.

When Evelyn Erith stumbled upon the suspicious letter that came into the hands of the censorship office all her adventurous spirit responded to the lure of uncovering its secret. Bred in luxury, this beautiful girl put aside all the comforts of wealth to bear the hardships of an extraordinary search for information which was vital to the United States Government. Where that search led and into what unheard-of adventures with the mysterious Kay McKay on the Swiss frontier is a romance which Robert W. Chambers unfolds with a tension that grows to the very final scene in his new romance, IN SECRET. This story combines very remarkably the early adventurous appeal and the riper art of that past-master of romance, Robert W. Chambers. For sheer imaginative power and the ability to make you see and feel, IN SECRET is notable. This story blends forest adventure, marked by unusually beautiful descriptions, with mystery and intrigue. It is a new kind of Chambers novel. You are caught up willy-nilly in the meshes of a rapid-moving plot which begins in the United States Secret Service office and leads you eventually over seas to a very romantic spot in the Swiss mountains where the closing scenes are dramatically staged and love under the stars has its fulfilment.

Small Things

¶ A book of great little stories about the small things — the everyday episodes—both humorous and pathetic—in the experiences of one of America's best-loved women writers as a war-worker in Paris.

¶ It is nothing more pretentious than a record of the reactions of war upon little lives torn from their niches of peaceful labor and hurled from content into a din of fear and grief, of mad German things incompatible with civilization's idea of playing the game, of our American girls laboring undaunted across seas, of our doughboys marching gayly and grimly "into the dark," of the "upspringing divinenesses" that made war bearable.

¶ And in their unpretentiousness, in the simple beauty of their telling, these inimitable glimpses of the bright soul and indomitable spirit of war-scarred France will touch the heart of every American.

DEMOCRACY'S PROBLEMS IN RECONSTRUCTION

DEMOCRACY IN RECONSTRUCTION. Edited by Frederick A. Cleveland, formerly Chairman of President Taft's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, and Joseph Shafer, Professor of History in the University of Oregon and Vice Chairman of the National Board for Historical Service. New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $2.50.

PROBLEMS OF RECONSTRUCTION. By Isaac Lippincott, Ph. D., Associate Professor of Economics, Washington University. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.60.

IN the very beginning of the impressive volume of more than five hundred pages edited by Mr. Cleveland and Professor Shafer we are reminded not only of the gigantic work that faces European countries in getting upon their feet again after the chaos resulting from the great war, but that America will have to play a large part in that labor, aside from the responsibilities that must fall upon her individually as a participant in the unparalleled struggle in its closing and most pregnant months. It is Professor Shafer himself who says that "war-swept Europe avowedly approaches reconstruction as an inescapable problem growing out of the material and human devastation wrought by the holocaust of the last four years." Then, after remarking that Americans, standing in safety behind the wide barrier of the sea, are fondly protesting their immunity from a similar compulsion, he reminds us that today the world is a single vast community, in the sense that ideas which inform the life of all its parts are common to all. With this admitted fact as a foundation, the group of distinguished men who have contributed articles on the reconstruction which already has begun make it apparent that democracy is to be the governing principle, not only in America, but in the whole civilized world. In his chapter on "The Historical Background of Reconstruction in America," Professor Shafer shows that the history of this country, based on sound democracy, paves the way for a reconstructed policy which will be merely the continuation of that prevailing before the war, except that it will be more emphatic. His own words are:

> The most hopeful development in the new social consciousness that has come into existence partly in consequence of the war, and which is rapidly unifying the demand for a sane, evolutionary, but unequivocally liberal, solution of the economic and social problems of American life.

In speaking of the ideals of democracy as interpreted by President Wilson, Mr. Cleveland takes occasion to review the whole Wilson Administration in its relation to the war, always with caution and in a markedly conservative spirit. Nevertheless, he pays this tribute to the President as an apostle of that equality of mankind which is coming to be a worldwide axiom:

> And his interpretation of democracy, his application of principles to the questions at issue at the time that war was declared, have been fully approved not alone by American public opinion, but no less by the common people everywhere. In the midst of the clamor and confusion of international conflict, when the forces of Prussian militarism were in their ascendency, President Wilson's voice rang out like the voice of Sheridan as he rode into the confusion of retreat at Winchester. From that day forward every flag which went before the Allies into battle was a symbol of Liberty.

Democracy is regarded in various aspects in its relation to every-day life by the many writers whose names are appended to papers in the volume. Thus Professor Carl Kelsey of the University of Pennsylvania deals exhaustively and authoritatively with the subject of "Democracy and Private Property," and Professor Arthur James Todd of Minnesota in "Democracy and the Family" goes rather deeply into sex as well as domestic questions. Condemning the autocratic policy of some European rulers who, anxious to maintain their position of advantage and to dominate by force, must scheme to promote a high birth rate and to suppress intelligent considering of reproduction, he says:

> Democracy, to the contrary, if it is to succeed, must put its faith rather in good than in large populations; it must encourage rational calculation; it must realize that "the policy of population for population's sake means brutality upon brutality," and that the old call to prudent people "to behave imprudently in the supposed interests of the race" is really a call to cultural suicide and perpetuation of barbarism. Democracy can never thrive where men are cheap. " " Hence, without accepting the vagaries of organized propaganda for birth control, democracy in reconstruction will tolerate and even encourage the freest study and discussion of this whole problem of how to make men precious, if necessary by conferring upon them bounty value.

"Democracy and Health," "The Child and the New Order," "Educational Lessons of the War," "Saving and Thrift," and "Social Insurance" are some of the other chapter headings, while the labor problems of after the war are discussed by Professor Harold G. Moulton of Chicago and William G. Ogburn of the National War Labor Board. Professor Moulton's paper was originally read by him in Washington at the first session of the Reconstruction Conference of the National Popular Government League on Jan. 9, 1919. It is entitled "Demobilization and Unemployment." He sums up a thoughtful essay with this conclusion:

> We have the choice of two methods of meeting the situation: (1) By providing employment on public works of enduring value; (2) by supporting by public charity an army of unemployed in nonproductive idleness. The former is the way that will make for satisfied, self-reliant American citizenship; the latter is but a palliative—it prevents starvation, but it does not avoid ingratitude and bitterness of spirit, nor make for orderly social and economic life.

Mr. Ogburn, under the heading "Capital and Labor," gives an interesting review of war labor problems as he sees them, and while admitting that "the subject is one shot through with emotion, and that it is much easier to form judgments based on prejudice than on reason," concludes thus:

> There are some forces operating to make the relations of capital and labor harmonious, but the forces leading in the other direction are more numerous and more powerful. In other words, it would seem that a good deal of trouble is in store. By considerable effort some phases of the trouble can be eliminated, but any escape from fairly serious industrial conflict seems impossible. What will be the result? It may be that capital will make a number of concessions in regard to some of the lesser demands of labor that otherwise would make for unrest. But that labor will make the big gains or overturn contemplated by the extreme wants of labor seems improbable.

The need of motorized highways, the problem of the railroads, and the future of ocean commerce all receive attention in well-considered contributions by experts, and four of the most interesting chapters deal with after-war political problems. The sweeping application of the war to modern democracy is forcefully set forth in the closing paragraphs of the chapter by Charles A. Beard, Director of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research.

The book as a whole is one of the most valuable aids to the study of political and economic conditions in America as the aftermath of the great war that has come from the press this year. Not only does it breathe throughout the spirit of true democracy, but the list of distinguished contributors gives it an authority which makes it safe, as well as interesting, reading.

Although, apparently, Professor Lippincott's "Problems of Reconstruction" was written before the war came to an end, his prevision is undeniable. He saw what would be needed to bring the world back to its balance, and what he has set forth here is distinguished by a sagacity and judicial steadiness of thought that prove how closely he has studied his subject. It does not appear that he comes to any strikingly original conclusions, however. What he says has been generally said by others, for the simple reason that nothing else could be the utterance of ordinarily intelligent Americans. For example:

> Reconstruction measures should not be designed for the benefit of any particular class, interest, or industry, nor even for the benefit of any particular nation. Reconstruction is a world problem. Owing to the dependence of the parts of the world on each other, every nation is concerned with the measures of the other. The test of the reconstruction policy in every case, whether it applies within national boundaries or to international industrial relations, is that the measure should be designed to guarantee and safeguard progress. In short, the goal is the maintenance of progress and the equitable distribution of its benefits.

Having laid down these premises, the author reviews the various war measures with which everybody is familiar—the control of food products, fuel, labor, and so on—in this country. Then, after glancing at the war control in foreign countries and considering the economic results, with reconstruction in foreign lands, he devotes a chapter to considering what he terms "a reconstruction plan for the United States." His "plan"—or, rather, plans—is not very clear, for he puts forth three or four without seeming to be particularly hopeful of any one of them. In a general way he favors a reconstruction organization to be composed of a central committee, or commission, with subcommittees. The latter will have a number of interests in common, since "many of them will be interested in methods of supplying raw materials, in financial facilities, in foreign trade policy, in questions of transportation, in labor policy, and possibly in problems of education and scientific research." He suggests that the central committee might be composed of fifteen persons, of whom two are Senators and two Representatives in Congress.

Professor Lippincott's volume, while showing thought and earnest study, does not go far in solving reconstruction problems. He gives the impression that his own views are still in a fluid condition—or were when he wrote. Even now it may be too soon to lay down any hard-and-fast policy for bringing the world back to sanity and orderly progress. But books made with that object in view certainly are to be commended.

SALT Or, THE EDUCATION OF GRIFFITH ADAMS By CHARLES G. NORRIS

"It is a terrible indictment of parental delinquency, and of school, college and university failure to accomplish the very things for which they are supposed to exist. The book is not easy reading in some places, but it is brave and sincere. It simply had to be written by somebody. I commend it especially to parents, . . . to ministers, . . . to teachers and college men generally."

AFOOT IN GERMANY

WHEN that inveterate "vagabond," as he calls himself, HARRY A. FRANCK, wound up the chronicle of his last tramping experience, "Vagabonding Down the Andes," and announced that he was off for Europe to play his part in the great war as a soldier in the A. E. F., one could not help a passing regret that a writer of such unique, delightful travel books should leave the romantic highways and byways of the world for the devastating trenches of France. As it has turned out, however, for Lieutenant (it will never do to call him "vagabond" now that he has won his new title) FRANCK, war, happily, has served merely as the preliminary—but a very necessary preliminary—to a resumption, under the most novel circumstances, of his old profession of the open road. The ordinary pedestrian, we fancy, would hardly choose Germany just now for a prolonged tramp trip. But Lieutenant FRANCK, one hardly needs to be reminded, is not an ordinary pedestrian. He started on his tramping career by "putting a girdle around the earth" without money in his purse to help him in that always difficult operation. But he had the inquisitiveness and the laughing humor of Robin Goodfellow himself, and it was easy for the readers of his "A Vagabond Journey Around the World" to see that it was the very difficulties, the hair-raising adventures of the trip that commended the latter to him. It was the same inborn venturesomeness that led him into his later tramping experiences in Spain, Central America, the Canal Zone, and that last delightful burst of adventure that surely never before occurred to the imagination of the most dyed-in-the-wool tramp to hasard, "a journey, chiefly afoot, from Panama to Buenos Aires." Having done these things, and gone through what must have been for him a comparatively peaceful interim in the trenches, what else was there for Lieutenant FRANCK to "do," than Germany? This time he will not wait until his return home to write up his adventures. He started on his trip early in March, and already the first chapter of his experiences appears, under the headline "Through Germany on Foot," in Harper's Magazine for July, where an editorial note informs us that "the author, famous for his vagabond journeys in almost every nook and corner of the world, has set out, with camera and knapsack, to tramp through a country that has been screened from the outside world for over four years."

ALTHOUGH it will abound undoubtedly with adventure of the old-time vagabond sort, this new "journey" of Lieutenant FRANCK'S has a somewhat different motive back of it than the others. If it is successful in its main purpose it will furnish us not merely with an entertaining travel book, but with a document of considerable importance in history as well. From various sources we are hearing what Germany's attitude is toward this or that problem arising out of the war; but the information is by no means always authentic, nor does it really convey, or pretend to convey, what the great mass of the German people are thinking. To learn this, to get even measurably near it, one would have to leave the beaten roads of travel and come upon the people in the intimacy of the countryside, or that back-door peep into cities that is only open to the vagabond traveler. Your parlor-car tourist necessarily sees or hears none of these things that Lieutenant FRANCK is setting out to see. It is a case where poverty, real or assumed, carries an open sesame to gates that remain locked before the subtlest conjurations of wealth. Lieutenant FRANCK has proved himself many a time before this an adept in getting at the heart of an uncommunicative people's mystery, and he has, moreover, the journalistic instinct for the kind of information that is worth while, that is "news." In his first article, which is largely introductory to the series and describes his departure from Paris and his experiences in the zone occupied by the American armies, there is not so much of the kind of information that he is after as increased opportunity will doubtless make available later on. There are significant bits here and there, however, like this from a German woman at whose house in Trier FRANCK passed the night and who thus answered a query regarding the Kaiser:

"That for the Kaiser!" she snapped. "Of course, he wasn't entirely to blame; and he wanted to quit in 1916. But the rich people, the Krupps and the like, hadn't made enough yet. He didn't, at least, need to run away. If he had stayed in Germany, as he should have, no one would have hurt him; no living man would have touched a hair of his head. Our Crown Prince? Ach! the Crown Prince is leichtsinnig, [light-minded.]"

This same informant contrasted the British and French unfavorably with the Americans, but her sincerity in this, considering the fact that she was talking to an American army officer, might well be questioned:

"Of course, it is natural that the British and French should treat us worse than the Americans. They used to bomb us here in Trier, the last months. I have often had to help Grossmutter down into the cellar"—Grossmutter smirked confirmation—"but that was nothing compared to what our brave airmen did to London and Paris. Why, in Paris they killed hundreds night after night, and the people were so wild with fright they trampled one another to death in trying to find refuge—"

"I was in Paris myself during all the big raids, as well as the shelling by Grosse Bertha," I protested, "and I assure you there was seldom great damage—"

"Ah, but they cover those things up so cleverly," she replied, quickly, not in the slightest put out by the contradiction.

There is no question, however, as to the quality of the food served by this woman (who, by an odd coincidence, bore the name of FRANCK) and that must have opened up a disheartening vista to the unfortunate "vagabond" just starting on his journey:

The breakfast next morning consisted of coffee and bread, with more of the tasteless turnip jelly. All three of the ingredients, however, were only in name what they purported to be, each being Ersats, or "substituts," for the real article. The coffeee was really roasted corn, and gave full evidence of that fact by its insipidity, but Frau FRANCK served me real sugar with it. The bread—what shall one say of the German war bread that will make the picture dark and heavy and indigestible enough? It was cut from just such a loaf as I had seen gaunt German prisoners hugging under one arm as they came blinking up out of their dugouts at the point of a doughboy bayonet, and to say that such a loaf seemed to be half sawdust and half mud, that it was heavier than any adobe brick and far darker, and that its musty scent was all but overpowering, would be far too mild a statement, and the comparison an insult to the mud brick. Frau FRANCK claimed it was made of potatoes and bad meal. I am sure she was overcharitable. Yet this atrocious substance, which I, by no means unaccustomed to strange food, tasted once with a shudder of disgust, the German masses had been chiefly subsisting on since 1915. No wonder they quit! The night before the bread had been tolerable, having been brought from the country; but the three women had stayed up munching that great delicacy until the last morsel had disappeared.

Naturally, Lieutenant FRANCK'S main problem will be to sift the true from the false in what these Germans tell him. His fellow-officers found these people "cringing, detestably servile." As one of them put it, "It's a whole damned nation crying 'Kamerad!'—playing 'possum until the danger is past." FRANCK, admitting the truth that may be in this view, wonders whether there is not a certain degree of likelihood, to say the least, in the way a German, who acted as his guide, put it to him: "We are done; we have had enough at last." But that is the kind of question that only an unconventional journey like his through the heart of Germany stands a chance to solve.

VISCOUNT FRENCH ON THE CAMPAIGN OF 1914

1914. By Field Marshal Viscount French of Ypres, K. P., O. M., &c. With a preface by Marshal Foch. Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company. $6.

THE battle of the armies is over and the battle of the books has begun. Viscount French has fired the first gun in a duel of pens that will surely eclipse the similar duels that raged—and still rage, for that matter—around Waterloo and Gettysburg, around the March to the Sea and the surrender of Metz and the battle of Santiago.

The British commander is unsparingly frank, as blunt as one expects an old soldier to be—even more so. One lays down his book with the firm conviction that a number of men, some of them holding high place, are seething with indignation at what stands in its pages. One can almost hear the swish of their pens as they rush to the defense of their actions in those fateful Summer and Autumn days of 1914, when the fate of France and the British Empire trembled in the balance. And one also realizes, with a feeling akin to regret, that certain cherished ideas about those days, which four years had almost crystallized into firm tenets of faith, may have to be revised, or at least held on probation until definite decisions can be formed.

For instance—who won the battle of the Marne? One had supposed that the major part of the credit belonged to Joffre, with Foch a close second, and others, including French, honorably placed, but not in the lead. Yet, according to French's disclosures in his book, Joffre, backed by Kitchener, desired the British commander to stand long before the line of the Marne was reached. French refused, because he felt, he says, that such a stand would mean the annihilation of his already sorely tried and decimated army.

The most sensational pages in his book are those in which he tells of Kitchener's hurried visit to him in France during the great retreat from Mons:

> Lord Kitchener (he writes) arrived on this occasion in the uniform of a Field Marshal, and from the outset of his conversation assumed the air of a Commander in Chief, and announced his intention of taking the field and inspecting the troops.
> On hearing this, the British Ambassador (Sir Francis, now Lord Bertie) at once emphatically objected and drafted a telegram to the Foreign Secretary stating clearly and unmistakably his views, and demanding instructions. He gave this dispatch to Lord Kitchener to read. The latter then asked for my opinion, and I said my views on the subject coincided entirely with those of the Ambassador. * * *
> In the conversation which followed between us all Lord Kitchener appeared to take grave exception to certain views which I expressed as to the expediency of leaving the direction of the operations in the field in the hands of the military chiefs in command in the field. He abruptly closed the discussion and requested me to accompany him for a private interview in another room.
> When we were alone he commenced by entering a strong objection to the tone I assumed. Upon this, I told him all that was in my mind. I said that the command of the British forces in France had been intrusted to me by his Majesty's Government; that I alone was responsible to them for whatever happened, and that on French soil my authority as regards the British Army must be supreme until I was legally superseded by the same authority which had put that responsibility upon me. I further remarked that Lord Kitchener's presence in France in the character of a soldier could have no other effect than to weaken and prejudice my position in the eyes of the French and my own countrymen alike. I reminded him of our service in the field together some thirteen years before, and told him that I valued highly his advice and assistance, which I would gladly accept as such, but that I would not tolerate any interference with my executive command and authority so long as his Majesty's Government chose to retain me in my present position.

Blunt speaking, with a vengeance. Kitchener lies at the bottom of the sea; he cannot answer. But there will doubtless be plenty of champions to wield pens in his behalf against the outspoken victor of Ypres.

Others whom he assails, however, are alive. Will Joffre lie quiet under French's implication that he wished to fight a pitched battle before the Marne was reached; that he does not deserve the great credit which he has received from the world for the famous order to the French armies to wheel about when they reached the Marne, and not a moment sooner, and die where they stood rather than give up another inch to the enemy?

And will General Horace Smith-Dorrien swallow what French says about him? The man who stood at Le Cateau and was supposed to have saved the entire British army by his heroic tenacity on the darkest day of the retreat from Mons—for which French himself gave Smith-Dorrien credit in a dispatch written after Le Cateau—is now severely criticised by his former commander for the very action which previously elicited his praise. He is also made the target of other stinging accusations.

French emphatically refuses to take any of the blame for the results of Le Cateau, shouldering all of it on Smith-Dorrien.

"In more than one of the accounts," writes French, "of the retreat from Mons it is alleged that some tacit consent at least was given at headquarters at Saint Quentin to the decision arrived at by the commander of the 2d Corps, (Smith-Dorrien.) I owe it to the able and devoted officers of my staff to say that there is not a semblance of truth in this statement."

Lanrezac, the French General who commanded beyond the right of French's forces, is vigorously condemned by the blunt Briton. This French General, he writes, was held by Joffre in high esteem and represented as the best commander in the French Army. French, however, detected, on their very first meeting, "a certain overconfidence." He was not surprised, he adds, to find Lanrezac "the most complete example, amongst the many this war has afforded, of the Staff College 'pedant' whose 'superior education' had given him little idea of how to conduct war." To Lanrezac's subsequent falling back before the Germans the later dire straits of the British Army have largely been attributed. Viscount French leaves his reputation in worse plight than ever.

But his book is by no means all criticism; and what there is of criticism is never of the whining sort, but as uncompromisingly direct as the little glimpses already given. There are also little thumbnail sketches of the personalities of men whom French held in esteem, done with a deftness that makes them one of the most interesting features of the volume. For Foch the British commander has only eulogy; his constant motto was "Attack! Attack! Attack!" It was impossible to work with him and not become infected with his sanguine temper and optimism. And men whose names are now known wherever the vicissitudes of the great war have been followed, but who were mere subordinate leaders under French in the black days of 1914, come in for praise no less enthusiastic. Among those who appear again and again in French's pages, to receive glowing compliments each time, are Sir Douglas Haig, commander of the 1st Corps throughout the retreat and the subsequent battles of the Aisne and Ypres; Sir Julian Byng, later the hero of Cambrai; General Allenby, reserved by fate to be the conqueror of Jerusalem; General Rawlinson, and numerous officers of lower grades to whose intelligence, resourcefulness, and valor their commander pours out unstinted eulogy. And he enshrines in glory the name of one little known—at least in this country—General FitzClarence, who saved the day at one of the most critical moments of the great battle of Ypres, and was killed a few days later. To save the day at that battle meant to save the British Empire, so it may be judged whether FitzClarence's name will live in Great Britain now that Viscount French has certified to his deserts.

What Ypres meant becomes appallingly clear in French's account of the battle. It was touch and go; the line was practically broken again and again; only the dogged tenacity of the British soldier, never in all his long history more gloriously attested, saved the Channel ports from capture and Britain from the deadliest peril. The British Commander at that fateful battle makes no attempt to gloss over its seriousness. He knew himself to be outnumbered; he knew his army to be wearied and shaken and terribly depleted.

"I felt as if the last barrier between the Germans and the Channel seaboard was broken down, and I viewed the situation with the utmost gravity," he writes, in reviewing the events of Oct. 31, 1914. "It was a dramatic half hour, the worst I ever spent in a life full of vicissitudes, such as mine has been."

But he knew his men. They not only stood, but they rallied, and counterattacked, and drove the Germans before them. And the day was won.

The British commander tells in his book of the great hopes aroused by the Russians in the opening days of the war, of the eager scanning of the news from the eastern front in the belief that the Grand Duke Nicholas would cause the Germans to cease their hammer blows at the Channel ports and turn their attention to the Russian frontier. For Nicholas's skill as a General, French has only words of praise.

He speaks in censure of the British tendency of the early days to scatter forces in far-away theatres of war instead of concentrating on the western front, and he minces no words in dealing with the question of munitions. His attitude on this, it will be remembered, stirred up a veritable hornets' nest.

In short, Viscount French's book simply bristles with challenges to controversy. Right or wrong, it must unquestionably become one of the basic books of the war, one of the sources with which every historian must acquaint himself.

John Galsworthy's
NEW NOVEL
Saint's Progress

Easily the most important literary event of the season.

A VERY modern story of the challenge of these times to the world of a middle-aged English vicar.

A story of the loss of the old-time faith and of the gulf between the generations. For, as young Morland says in the story: "It's going to be—it's got to be—a young world from now on. What's the use of pretending it's like it was?"

THE AMERICAN VOCATIONAL EXCHANGE, 7 PINE ST.

Interviews accorded 10 A. M.-2 P. M. REGISTRATION FREE.

The present-day outlook for women is most encouraging. The market demand in all lines has been for several weeks far beyond the supply.

The employers who are holding back in the belief that "salaries will drop" are deceiving themselves. This is not an exaggerated statement. As the "labor clearing house" for many banks and corporations, we speak of the facts as they exist.

This is the time for the efficient employe to place herself advantageously, but lest some misunderstand, we would call special attention to the word EFFICIENT. Our applicants must expect to be rated according to ability plus personality.

The foundation on which the American Vocational Exchange was reared was "the spirit of helpfulness to the applicant." That we have been equally fair to employe and employer is emphasized by the preference given OUR SERVICE throughout the financial district.

We give A SQUARE DEAL.

30 MINUTES from Manhattan (Penna. Terminal) or a few minutes longer by automobile. The water frontage, along the North Shore of Long Island, is the place of greatest interest, the point of highest value and greatest desirability as a residence location. This is what accounts for the scarcity of waterfront and makes this sale the most important held in recent years. Property on or near the waterfront has been absorbed almost as quickly as offered. All-year or summer houses are to be found everywhere along the bay-indented, peninsulated North Shore, with its wealth of harbors, hills and woods.

RIGHT ON THE WATER

Overlooking Long Island Sound

Beechhurst combines the transit, improvements and conveniences of the city with the attractions and recreations of the best sections further out. Remember that Beechhurst is not an experiment, but a pronounced success, both socially and in the large number of beautiful homes that have been erected.

78 Extra Large Plots are included in the sale, most of which have a frontage of 80 to 100 feet, and many of which are of extra depth. Several of these plots are directly on the water and possess riparian rights while many others have unobstructed marine views. Together with 73 lots of the ordinary size, including a number of business lots, opposite the station.

AT HOME, June 22, 1919.

Dear Mr. Homeseeker:

I want to sell my suburban home. Business takes me to Europe permanently. If you want a fine, well-built, livable home of your own, cheap, answering this letter will furnish the opportunity. The plot has 160 feet of actual waterfront with riparian rights, running in depth 245 feet to Lake Drive. A beautiful lawn with splendid shading oaks and many flowers and shrubs run to the water's edge. The house is five years old and in perfect condition. There are 4 big rooms on the first floor, 4 fine bedrooms, 2 large bathrooms and sleeping porch on the second floor, and a pool and billiard room, maid's room, bath and storeroom on the third floor. Electric light, heat, water, parquet floors and all city conveniences are installed. Everything up to date and modern. And it is only a few minutes' walk to the railroad station. Express service. Quick, convenient and easy commuting to heart of Manhattan. The price is less than it has cost me to date—$13,500. Most of this can remain on mortgage. If you like the furniture I will sell that, too, at a bargain.

Sincerely,
OPPORTUNITY,

STRICTLY speaking—NOW is the only time at your disposal to buy land and build a residence.

Price $45,000 for nearly nine acres.

Miniature farm-plot of land, bounded by three roads, with a real old country lane to the south. High ground, charming view, and part of a highly restricted 300-acre park, adjoining Wykagyl Country Club.

Highest point in the center of this plot. Will sell as a whole, or in parts, as divided on above map. All improvements. Write for booklet and complete map.

This one-plot idea is most beautifully worked out on a tract of the same size adjoining.

To Apartment Seekers

who can invest $500 to $2,000 in Cash we offer a plan by which apartment-house tenants can reduce their cost of living and substitute, in place of rent receipts, an actual dividend-paying interest in the Apartment House they occupy.

Rentals Are Reduced

The net income is divided pro rata among the tenants, who are the owners and who control the property they occupy, the rentals to be paid and the expenses to be incurred.

We Have Apartments For Oct. 1st Occupancy at Jackson Heights

CHALLENGES DATA IN RENT INQUIRIES

Real Estate Council Asks if Any Real Solution of Problem Has Been Reached.

NEED FACTS, NOT THEORIES

Declares That the Situation Is Too Acute to Warrant Any Further Delay.

Will house reconstruction be resumed, will modern rentable space increase, will rents decrease, as the result of any of the "hearings," the "announcements," the "plans," reported during the past week?

Has any real progress been made toward stabilizing what is at its root a question of investment values like any business proposition?

These questions are asked by the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, which has issued a warning against the present methods for investigating the so-called rent problem.

The Council points out that "new committees and commissions begin investigations almost every week, each apparently intent on making up for lost time by revamping the work of its predecessors and listening to more of the same kind of 'evidence,' often thoroughly unreliable and incompetent.

"Such statements as that there are two billions of dollars in savings banks and two billions in insurance companies with the inference that that amount of money is available for mortgage loans, are so far from the actual facts as to reflect upon the capacity of any committee which would allow the assertion to pass without prompt denial.

"It is a matter of public record and even of common knowledge that the total resources of the savings banks of the State amount to only two billion dollars, of which one-half is already invested in direct loans on real estate and the balance very largely in such secondary real estate loans as railroad and Government bonds. As to the life insurance companies, it is currently reported that they have been unable as yet to pay all of their subscription to the Fourth Liberty Loan and at the same time meet their large subscriptions to the Fifth Loan.

"It is nothing short of ridiculous to say that the real estate interests are not desirous of exerting themselves to the utmost to increase their profits. Can a bank pay dividends if it keeps its money in the vault? Can a real estate firm profit from an appraisal department when there are no appraisals to be made?

"The situation is too acute to warrant further delay in passing from theory to fact. Needs and inclinations are identical to all parties concerned—tenants, lenders, owners, builders and even all employers. All classes look to the official investigators to arrive at the facts as a business proposition and then to recommend such solution as they are able.

"It is not evident that any of these commissions has organized such a corps of experts as could formulate a definite development proposition or building enterprise, backed by contracts with competent engineering firms or reputable builders, as can be presented to financiers. How else can the actual facts be ascertained?

"There is grave danger that even some investigators are proceeding on the assumption that a landlord's dollar is of different value than the tenant's. By what course of reasoning can we assume that space can now be supplied to tenants at former panic prices, when the builder can obtain no more material and labor for his dollar than can any other member of the community?

"No investigator will succeed unless he recognizes the absolute necessity for greater conservation of real estate values than has been the tendency in recent years. Formerly real estate interests met community needs on a basis of five per cent. or less to the mortgagee and six per cent. or less to the owner of the equity. Billions of dollars were available at those rates because of the stability and high regard in which real property was held. What assurance is there for the future if our investigators do not encourage sound thought on these matters?"

Bronx Industrial Growth.

In 1910 the population of the Borough of the Bronx was 431,000, and the laboring population consisted of 18,456 males and 5,654 females, a total of 24,110.

In 1908 there had been but 642 factories. In 1912 there were 1,614 factories.

In 1913, when the population had reached 505,000, there were 1,830 factories employing 21,702 males and 5,838 females, a total of 27,540.

In 1916 the population had increased to 700,000, and the laboring population and number of factories had increased in proportion, there being 2,050 factories, employing 52,496 males and 16,584 females, a total working force of 69,080. In that year the annual payrolls for the industrial establishments in the Bronx amounted to $38,000,000.

In 1917, with a population of 750,000, the Bronx had 2,250 factories, employing 74,000 workers, and an annual payroll for these establishments amounting to $45,000,000.

In 1918, with approximately the same number of factories and workers, the annual payroll had increased, due to war conditions, to $61,000,000.

East Chester Park Auction.

An interesting piece of Westchester County property will be sold at auction by Charles H. Bard, auctioneer, on June 28, 1919, at 1 o'clock P. M. This property is located in East Chester Park, town of East Chester, fronting on White Plains Post Road at Swift Avenue. It comprises 164 unrestricted building plots, two apartment and two frame buildings. The sale will be held on the premises.

This property is midway between New Rochelle and White Plains, near Tuckahoe, Bronxville, and Scarsdale. There are splendid railroad communtation and trolley facilities, and most excellent roadways radiating in all directions and a direct route to New York City.

Brooklyn Bridge Finances.

The total receipts of the Brooklyn Bridge last year were $248,344 and the expenditures upon the bridge were $216,-694.

PAYING FOR ESTIMATES.

Elimination of Free Estimate Evil Will Lessen Building Costs.

The average builder doing competitive work will estimate on ten jobs in order to secure one, says Building Age. Each one of these estimates will cost on the average at least $75. Thus an outlay of at least $750 must be made before a contract is secured, $675 of which is waste pure and simple.

This $675 goes into the builder's overhead. It is charged up against the one job in ten secured, adding just that much to the cost.

Many an architect's expenses also goes into useless overhead. In a recent competition, 75 architects submitted plans for an expensive structure. Each set of plans prepared on the chance of securing this job averaged $1,000, wasted, $74,000. And the owners paid for this in the form of the architect's overhead.

That condition is deplorable. If owners who desired competitive plans or a choice of estimates paid for just as many as desired, then less waste effort would be required and overhead would be lowered. That means an appreciable reduction in costs.

Of course when a builder goes after a job, having no competition, it is good business for him to give an estimate of cost. The owner naturally desires to know the cost of the work before proceeding. If it is too high the builder does not secure the job, but neither does anybody else.

Too often, however, in localities where many contractors are willing to bid, ten or twelve will be asked to submit estimates—free. All bids may be rejected. At best only one will win out; the others will have had their trouble for nothing.

That is not fair, but unfortunately the trade has educated the public to expect this sort of indiscriminate service. Now that costs have advanced so considerably, it is time that such wholesale free estimates on competitive business be eliminated. Let owners pay for just those estimates required; they will find their costs lower.

Elimination of the free estimate evil will do much to lower the cost of building.

Valid Insurance.

A building is not insured; it is a person who is insured for the loss of a building. The common misunderstanding on this point has led to endless trouble, according to The New York Building Managers' Bulletin. But fire insurance is not a bet between anybody and an insurance company that a certain building will burn within a certain time, and the law severely frowns upon any such notion. Sometimes it is even difficult for a person who stands to take a substantial loss in case of fire to purchase valid insurance, to say nothing of the idea that a policy covering a building protects whoever has any interest in it, or whoever holds the policy, as is often supposed.

The insured must have an insurable interest in the property insured or the policy is void. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, of such void policies are carefully treasured in safe deposit vaults by unsuspecting persons, most of whom, it is pleasant to learn, will never need to know they could collect nothing on them.

The aim of fire insurance is to make good to persons the intrinsic money value of losses they have sustained by fire. If a person stands to lose nothing through the destruction of a building by fire he has no insurable interest in it, no matter how many policies he holds.

Accurately stating the name of the person who actually may sustain a loss by fire and defining his exact interest, and seeing to it that these facts are correctly stated in the policy, is important.

Increased Realty Business.

Business aggregating $33,968,531 was transacted last year by the Charles F. Noyes Company. Every one of the fifty employes shared in the profits. Warner & McGrath, public accountants, certified that the gross business for 1919 was 316 per cent. of that in 1914 and 137 per cent. of the preceding year; its agency business was 190 per cent. of that five years ago and 117 per cent. of that of 1918; renting department, 300 per cent. of 1914 and 138 per cent. of 1918; selling department, 700 per cent. of 1914 and 140 per cent. of 1918, and the mortgage department showed the greatest gain of all, the business for 1919 being ten times greater than that of 1918 and 570 per cent. of 1914. The fiscal year of the company ended April 30.

Charles F. Noyes, discussing the realty market conditions and prospects, said: "It is my opinion that the next two or three years will be the best in the real estate business that we have experienced in the last decade. The buying-for-occupancy movement has started in full swing, and I look for even better business during the next year than we had last year.

Tax Church Lot.

The action of the Monmouth County (New Jersey) Board of Taxation in assessing a plot of ground in Asbury Park which had been the site of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, destroyed by fire, was upheld last week in an opinion filed by Frank B. Jess, President of the State Board of Taxes and Assessments. The congregation had appealed, asking that the tax assessment be canceled.

The facts that the lot in question is owned by a religious corporation, was occupied formerly by a church, and will again be used for that purpose do not entitle it to the exemption claimed, according to the opinion filed by Mr. Jess.

Queens Borough Sales.

Jonathan Holden sold two lots, each 25 by 75, on the west side of Railroad Avenue, 250 feet south of Remsen Avenue, Jamaica, and two lots, each 25 by 75, on the east side of Norris Avenue, 250 feet south of Remsen Avenue, Jamaica, to Abraham Gimpleson through William P. Jones.

The Ess and Em Realty Company bought 125 lots at Everett Park, Jamaica, for immediate improvement. Booth, Haugaard & Jones, Inc., Wolf H. Seidin and Alfred F. Wilson were the brokers.

Exposition Postponed.

To such proportions has the "Own Your Home" campaign grown that it has exceeded the expectations of those most vitally interested in it. To further the campaign movement it was decided at a recent meeting of the general committee of the "Own Your Home" exposition to extend the date of the affair so that added stimulus can be given to the campaign and the scope of the exposition enlarged to the proportions it warrants. By that time home builders will be able to benefit by the plans of Government, State, and municipal officials who are now planning loan systems to aid in the building of homes. Originally it was planned to hold the exposition in the 71st Regiment Armory June 25 to July 2. As now planned the exposition will be held in the armory Sept. 6 to 13.

AMERICAN BANKERS FAVOR AMORTIZATION OF MORTGAGES

By JOHN J. PULLEYN,
Chairman Committee on Amortization of Mortgage Loans, Savings Bank Section, American Bankers Association.

In any great movement the co-operation of the factors pertaining thereto is essential to its success. One of the chief reasons why the principle of amortization has not been generally applied heretofore by mortgage lenders is because adequate co-operation was lacking.

However, the consensus of opinion relating to the campaign to urge amortization of mortgage loans being considered at the present time by the Savings Bank Section of the American Bankers Association seems to be favorable.

The reasons are, chiefly, (1) a more systematic administration of loans, (2) needed funds for building operations, and (3) to promote the general health and welfare of the peoples of the several communities.

Amortized Federal Farm Loans.

Amortization, or the gradual reduction of the debt by periodical payments, is already in operation in connection with all farm loans made by the Federal Land Banks. There are a number of insurance companies, trust companies, and savings banks that have for years applied the principle, but it has had no general application.

The testimony of those who have amortized mortgage loans is wholly satisfactory. The principle has demonstrated its effectiveness in producing a better mortgage loan market and safer loans.

In the proper management of an industry the deterioration of the machinery used is carefully and accurately accounted for. If it were not so profits would be seriously affected. All debts of well-managed corporations necessarily must be amortized. It is inconceivable for a debtor of such character not to place a certain amount aside each period of profit-taking toward the liquidation of his debts.

It is good business, wise finance, to do so, but with many mortgage loans the borrower and lender consider the debt a continuing one, and thus no adequate provision is made for payment at maturity.

Many borrowers consider a mortgage debt in the light of the old axiom, "I'd rather owe it to you all my life than cheat you out of it." Nevertheless, some lenders seem thoroughly satisfied to continue the debt "on call" until such time as in the judgment of the lender the risk is adversely affected.

Improvement in the mortgage security through such a campaign as is now being conducted by the American Bankers Association is bound to have a salutary effect in the general real estate market. The mortgage loan has a most significant place in the business of the nation.

Including all lenders on mortgage security, private and institutional, there are held more than $10,000,000,000 in real estate loans, from which is derived an annual gross income of approximately $500,000,000.

50,000,000 People Affected.

More than 50,000,000 American people are involved in these transactions, for the banks which own the mortgages have a total of 25,500,000 savings deposit accounts, and the insurance companies, which own over $2,000,000,000 in mortgage loans, have 53,000,000 policies. Then, with the 3,000,000 or more borrowers on mortgage security, the total presents the deep interest of the American public in the greater soundness of mortgage debt.

The American people too easily go into debt and often have difficulty in getting out of it. Whereas, if the debt should be gradually liquidated out of earnings, much trouble and annoyance would thereby be obviated.

The writer does not deprecate the borrowing of funds on mortgage, but rather would heartily encourage it. Nevertheless, the condition of the borrower, the lender, and the general public would be considerably bettered if the debt were systematically liquidated and not held in virtual perpetuity. Thus there is described the underlying motive of the nation-wide campaign to urge amortization.

ENGLAND TO BUILD MANY NEW HOUSES

Planning Committee Sees Birmingham in Need of Minimum of 14,000.

BRICK SUPPLY IS SHORT

Financial Assistance Given to Manufacturers to Stimulate Production of Material.

An article in The London Times of April 21 on the housing needs of Britain's great industrial centres states that Birmingham requires a minimum of 14,000 new houses, and the Housing and Town Planning Committee of the City Council considers that 5,000 new houses must be built annually for the next twenty years.

For erection purposes in the next two years 900 acres have been acquired to build 10 to 12 houses per acre; 80 such houses have already been planned and are expected to be completed by this Fall. A public utility society is also reported to have purchased about thirty-four acres of land, and propose to obtain an advance from the Government of three-fourths of the total cost of acquisition, development of the site, and the building of houses.

Practically every municipality and local council in the "Black Country" have submitted building plans to the Local Government Board. The town of Dudley, which built 300 model dwellings in 1915-16, has submitted schemes for another 500 houses; the Walsall Corporation has received sanction for a big housing scheme, and at Wolverhampton, where 1,500 new dwellings are needed for workers, the building of 674 will be started immediately. At Luton, a hat-manufacturing centre, the corporation has acquired six sites at a cost of about $220,000, on which 1,000 houses are to be erected at the rate of twelve to the acre.

Large Demand for Brick.

The London Times of April 24 states that many local authorities have applied to the Local Government Board for official approval to start their housing schemes for workers. There are reported to be about 1,800 such local authorities in the country, and up to the present 750 schemes, involving the erection of 128,000 new dwellings, have been submitted.

Manufacturers of building materials claim that the Government departments concerned are doing what they can to hasten production of raw materials required for building purposes, but some time is expected to elapse before the production can be considered satisfactory. It is necessary for large brickworks to increase their productive capacity, and for this new machinery is required which will take time to be made.

The Local Government Board is said to have given orders for thousands of millions of bricks, and to help manufacturers have arranged to pay a large part of the cost when the bricks are in stack. The financial assistance thus offered, however, does not satisfy the smaller brickyards, which claim to be so badly equipped that they can not compete with better organized and equipped yards, and many of these smaller brickworks have not as yet been able to reopen their establishments.

Jersey Plant Sold.

The American Locomotive Works sold part of their Rogers works at Paterson, N. J., which has been used for storage purposes, to the Barbour Flax Spinning Company and the Dolphin Jute Mills. The Barbour Company acquired the set of buildings along the Raceway, together with water rights, and the Dolphin Company's purchase is located at the southeast corner of Spruce and Oliver Streets. Joseph P. Day negotiated the sale.

BEECHHURST AUCTION SALE.

Coincident with the recent announcement that the 151 plots and lots at Beechhurst, Queens, on the north shore of Long Island, would be sold at auction next Saturday, June 28, by the Jere Johnson, Jr., Company on the premises, Senator Charles C. Lockwood, Chairman of the Joint Legislative Committee investigating housing conditions, at a meeting held recently in the City Hall, stated that the city's most prominent life insurance companies and savings banks had promised him to lend $30,000,000 on mortgage loans for the construction of new houses.

He also said that, in his opinion, there would be no great difficulty experienced in having this sum increased to $50,000,000, perhaps to $75,000,000, the amount needed for immediate new construction.

Another circumstance that will cause a general acceptance of this conviction and lead to an early building movement of wide extent and big proportions is the disappointment of those who go into the suburbs seeking a home, either to lease or to purchase, and return to the city to continue paying an increased rental for at least another year or two. In most cases the period is two years, as far-sighted apartment landlords, having read "the handwriting on the wall," are insisting upon two, three, and five year leases from Oct. 1, in order that they may collect the highest period of time.

BUILDING MOVEMENT SWEEPING COUNTRY

Permits Issued in 164 Cities Show Increase of 110 Per Cent. in Month of May.

TOTAL VALUE $105,470,299

Statistics Indicate That "Go-Ahead" Policy Is Now Under Way.

Statistics of building permits for the month of May from 164 cities officially reported to The American Contractor indicate clearly that a "go-ahead" policy for construction is under way. Only 28 cities out of the 164 show a loss compared to last year's statistics, and the total of $105,470,299 for May of this year is a 110 per cent. gain over the total of $49,763,085 for the same cities during the corresponding period of last year.

This is encouraging when compared to the record for previous months of this year, as the following table shows:

Month.	No. Cities.	1919 Value.	1918 Value.
January	152	$23,869,215	$27,291,218
February	158	32,056,626	21,680,314
March	190	64,884,335	36,529,630
April	165	84,914,006	44,516,828
May	164	105,470,299	49,763,085
Total		$311,196,475	$179,781,065

In comparison to 1918 figures for the corresponding month, January, 1919, showed a loss of 12 per cent., February a gain of 48, March a gain of 77, and April a gain of 91.

These totals give a gain of 73 per cent. for the first five months of 1919 over 1918.

Comparison of May, 1919, figures with previous May figures is shown in the following tabulation:

Year.	Number Cities.	Number Permits.	Estimated Value.
1918	164	24,516	49,763,085
1917	117	26,479	75,168,152
1916	112	31,877	113,904,515
1915	112	25,608	86,469,129
1914	71		72,057,668

By reducing these figures to the number of permits per year per city for the month of May the average value of May permits per city per year 1914-1918 inclusive is $889,865. The average value of permits per city for May, 1919, is $643,111. Bearing in mind that the larger the number of cities the more small cities are included makes these figures look very favorable for the last month's activity. The conclusion may be drawn that normality is shown by the comparison, but it must be noted that the purchasing power of the 1919 dollar is much less than that of some of the included previous years.

Brooklyn Building With Airplane Landing

Ground was broken last week by the Gibbons Company, builders, for a new building to be erected on the east side of Columbia Street, just south of Hamilton Avenue, Brooklyn. The structure will have a frontage of 175 feet on Columbia Street, five stories in height; absolutely fireproof. Elevators extending to the roof, platform for aeros, together with air entrances from the roof are provided for in the plans.

NEW STUDIO FOR FOX FILMS.

Structure Now Building Said to be Largest Motion-Picture Plant Under One Roof.

At a cost of approximately $2,500,000, what is declared to be the largest motion picture plant in the world under one roof is being built at Tenth Avenue and Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Streets, Manhattan, by William Fox, as the home of the executive offices and laboratories and Eastern studios of the Fox Film Corporation.

Announcement of this motion-picture city, within two minutes of Broadway, was made last week by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the company.

The building, which will have a capacity for turning out 3,000,000 feet of film every week, will comprise three stories and basement, and will have a floor area of 150,000 square feet. Construction of the plant already is well advanced and the building is expected to be ready for occupancy in the Fall. It will be fireproof throughout, being constructed of steel, brick and concrete. Arrangement of offices, studio and laboratory has been made on a scientific basis, to insure a minimum of efficiency from the time a scene is photographed in the studio to the moment when the finished photoplay print leaves the shipping room.

An important part of the space on the first and second floors will be given over to a large laboratory where negatives will be developed and prints made of the various photoplays. To obtain a capacity of 3,000,000 feet of film every week, made necessary by the extraordinary growth in popularity of the motion picture throughout the world, the laboratory will contain several new mechanical features in curing the least possible lost motion and wasted effort.

Brooklyn Market Active.

Evidence of the extraordinary activity of the real estate market in Brooklyn is contained in the figures of the Kings County Register's office for the month of May, which have just been compiled by Register Webster. The office received during the month 5,962 deeds, 5,636 mortgages, 1,997 satisfactions, and 67 miscellaneous papers, a total of 13,662. This is an increase of more than 2,000 over the month of April, when 11,638 papers were recorded, and more than double the May record for last year, which was 6,713. The figures are the largest for the month of May in the history of the office, with the exception of 1905 and 1906. The total number of papers received during the first five months of the year, 47,107, is the largest for this period of any year since 1906.

The Kings County Register's office has become a very profitable enterprise for the taxpayers. The receipts for the month of May were $39,632.24, the largest receipts for any one month in the history of the office, and the expenses were $18,775.55, leaving a balance in favor of the taxpayers of $20,856.69. Thus far this year Register Webster has turned into the City Treasury $46,665.43 in excess of all expenditures. At this rate the office will show a profit for the city of considerably more than $100,000 this year.

These figures do not include the mortgage taxes collected by the office. The taxes collected during the month of May amounted to $89,205.50, as compared with $54,845 for April and $27,261 for May of last year. The mortgage taxes collected last month were the largest for any month since April, 1913, when the tax on a huge B. R. T. mortgage made a record which the office finds it difficult to exceed. The mortgage taxes collected thus far this year total $208,684.41, as compared with $90,878.29 for the corresponding period last year. This year's record is the highest since 1913.

Commercial Leases.

J. Warren Stokes of Fresno, Ca., has purchased through J. Arthur Fischer the International Garage and lease at 252 to 262 West Fortieth Street, on plot 132 by 100. Mr. Stokes will make extensive alterations, and contemplates adding four stories to the building. The broker has arranged for an extension of the lease, and the rental involved for the term aggregates $400,000. James J. Crowe was associate broker in the deal. Joseph F. McLoughlin of Peale & McLoughlin represented the purchaser and Julius J. Popper acted for the sellers.

Louis F. Sommer leased for the Vandam Warehouse Company, Inc., to the Roseland Amusement Company of Philadelphia the entire second floor in the northeast corner of Fifty-first Street and Broadway for a term of years for $350,000.

The Schulte Cigar Stores Company has secured from the City of New York a lease covering two spaces on the Manhattan side of the Brooklyn Bridge mezzanine promenade and will immediately construct and operate additional branch establishments.

M. & L. Hess, Inc., have leased the building at 48 West Twentieth Street to M. & L. Diamond Company, trunks and fibre cases.

Suburban Sales.

The Scarsdale Estates, Robert E. Farley, President, have sold to D. L. Linquist a plot at Murray Hill, Scarsdale, N. Y.

A. I. Perry bought the fifty-acre Reed property, bordering Ball's Lake, near Danbury, Conn., through the Batson Farm Agency.

Henry F. Kiell sold two corners of Maple Street and Pondfield Road, Bronxville, N. Y., through Burke Stone, Inc. The same broker for Dudley B. Lawrence a dwelling under construction on Park Avenue, Lawrence Park, to Edmund Taber Price, and for the Pelhamwood Company six plots on Highbrook Avenue, Pelhamwood, to J. Bajusz, who intends to erect two dwellings on the property.

The Long Island Market.

The property of Harry A. Cochrane on Tenth Street, between Grace Avenue and Kensington, Great Neck, was sold to A. W. Baylitts, controller of the Pennsylvania Hotel, through L. G. Wolff. The property has a road frontage of 70 feet and a depth of 150 feet, and is improved with a stucco dwelling and a two-car garage.

The Merrit W. Lund property at Glen Head, in the Glen Cove section of Long Island, has been sold by the Columbia Trust Company as trustee, to M. Raynor. The property consists of a large modern residence, with six acres. In the same section are two choice country estates which Arthur C. Sheridan, auctioneer, will offer at voluntary auction during the next several weeks.

War Plant to be Sold.

The plant of the International Arms and Fuse Company, erected for the manufacture of time fuses for French 75-mm. shells, has been offered for sale through Joseph P. Day.

The entire tract consists of 26 acres of level land, fronting on one of New Jersey's most important thoroughfares, Bloomfield Avenue, and served with an Erie Railroad siding, and improved with four main one-story sawtooth, brick and steel buildings with concrete floors, containing about 550,000 square feet of floor space; of the most modern type of construction and complete in every detail, with power plant, sprinkler system, artesian wells and reservoir, lunchroom, rest room, &c.

NEW HUDSON TUBE WORK TO BE PUSHED

FACES MANY PROBLEMS

Says Proper Location and Type of Tunnel Are First Points to Establish.

Clifford M. Holland, Divisional Engineer of the Public Service Commission, who had charge of the construction of the last two rapid transit East River tunnels, has been appointed chief engineer to superintend the building of the New York-New Jersey $12,000,000 vehicular tunnel. The appointment was made by the New York State Bridge and Tunnel Commission, which has its offices at 115 Broadway, and has charge of the building of the new tunnel.

Mr. Holland will receive a salary of $12,000 a year, or $5,000 a year more than he received as engineer of the Public Service Commission. He will resign his position with the latter body at once in order to take up his new job on June 15. Mr. Holland will have under him a board of five consulting engineers.

There has been some lack of agreement as to the ventilation of the new tunnel, and on this Mr. Holland has clear and emphatic views. He does not regard it as a serious problem.

"We have installed successful artificial ventilating systems in the East River tubes," said Mr. Holland. "True, the trains rushing through them furnish an automatic ventilation that will not be present in a tube through which much slower moving vehicles will pass. But the artificial ventilating systems work and are depended on for circulation in case of a stagnation of traffic, smoke from fire and short circuits.

"No, I think the more important problems of the vehicular tunnel construction will be the proper location, the selection of the proper type of tunnel and the determination of the most feasible, and the most economical type of construction that will insure success.

"It is a big subject and I will go into it with the one idea of making a careful investigation and devoting all my time to a thorough study of the whole project. I have an open mind now on all the various suggestions that have been made. I am neither a partisan of the single or double tube ideas, and I would not think of taking any position on any of the engineering questions involved until they have received my earnest study and that of the ablest consultants that it is possible to bring together."

Mr. Holland does not feel sure that it will be possible to begin actual work on construction this year. He said that it took a year to condemn property, make soundings of the river bottom, settle legal technicalities, and solve other points before work on the East River tubes could be begun.

Sales at Malverne, L. I.

Malverne, L. I., the first home community in Nassau County outside of the Greater New York tax district, is experiencing unusual real estate activity. Many sales of houses and lots have been reported in this section in the last two or three weeks, and the boom is constantly growing.

Among transactions reported last week by the Amsterdam Development and Sales Company, the developers of Malverne, are the following: Plot of twelve lots on the north side of Broadway to A. H. L. Becker of New York City; plot of three lots on Norwood Avenue, west of Ogston Terrace, to H. E. Garlock of Curtis Engineering Corporation. Mr. Garlock will build a California bungalow immediately. Plot of three lots on Park Boulevard East to Charles J. Trevall of Lynbrook, L. I. Plot of two lots on Wagg Avenue, west of Alynwick Road, to E. J. Christopher of Brooklyn. California bungalow and five lots on Alynwick Road, near Elmer Avenue, to A. T. Reynolds of New York City. Alfred H. Wagg sold his residence on Hempstead Avenue, Malverne, to Wallace B. Liverance of Brooklyn. Mr. Wagg has already begun construction of an eight-room Colonial residence on Alynwick Road, corner of Lindner Place South, which is planned to be ready for immediate occupancy.

The New Jersey Market.

The Lee estate sold about fifty lots fronting on Lyons Avenue, Bergen Street and Lehigh Avenue, Weequahic Park, Newark, a plot 360 by over 500, held at about $30,000, to Heywood M. Penn through J. L. Feibleman & Co. The buyer is having plans prepared for a number of one and two-family dwellings to be erected on the site.

Mary F. McGuinness sold to Nathan Gennet, through the office of Louis Schlesinger, Inc., the plot of land situated at 211 Newark Street. It is understood that Mr. Gennet will erect a garage on the plot at an early date.

The estate of Elizabeth M. Peshine sold the dwelling at the southwest corner of Douglas Road and Woodland Avenue, Glen Ridge, held at $24,000, to a client of E. E. Slocum.

Mrs. Julia Willets sold her residence at 41 Brunswick Road, Montclair, held at $12,500, to J. A. Ayres through the Frank Hughes-Taylor Company. The same brokers sold for Margaret McMurtrie her residence, on plot 50 by 150, held at $10,000, at 43 Watchung Avenue, to Henry D. Carlton.

Daniel Mellis sold his one-story concrete factory building on Little Street, 80 feet of Ralph Street, Belleville, to W. I. Sykes through Feist & Feist, Inc.

The Bliss estate sold, through the office of Louis Schlesinger, Inc., the one-family brick and stone residence 48 State Street to James Capezio, who will occupy the same as his residence after alterations are completed.

B. Widmark sold for cash to Arthur F. Schnabacker a dwelling, on lot 50 by 125, at 9 Godfrey Road, Montclair, through the Frank Hughes-Taylor Company.

The former home of Commander Ballington Booth, a residential property on the west side of South Mountain Avenue, Montclair, held at $55,000, fronting 230 feet on the avenue and extending back 750 feet to Undercliff Road, was sold by George K. Kirkham to F. R. Long through F. M. Crawley & Brothers.

The estate of James W. Pearsall sold the dwelling at 15 Park Place, Ridgewood, N. J., to Walter D. Tanchert, through S. S. Walstrum-Gordon & Forman.

WILL IMPROVE PROPERTY

Glen Island Sold for Home Development—Hebrew Orphan House Buys Odd Fellows Property.

The Trinity Church Corporation disposed of several more of its old buildings yesterday, occupying a plot 100 by 100 feet on the southeast corner of Greenwich and North Moore Streets, to B. Fischer & Co. The property, which is located in the heart of the wholesale grocery district, adjoins the eight-story building at the corner of Franklin Street now owned and occupied by the purchaser.

This purchase gives the Fischer Company the entire block front on Greenwich Street between Franklin and North Moore Streets, 175 by 100 feet.

The buyers contemplate the erection of a building in the near future to conform to their present structure, which will provide 90,000 additional square feet of floor space.

The plot, which is one of the very few available large plots in this district, was held at $115,000. John H. Day and William D. Kilpatrick negotiated the sale.

Glen Island Property Sold.

A corporation is being formed by several well-known real estate operators to acquire Glen Island, on Long Island Sound, near the city line, from the present owners, with the purpose of immediately developing the property into residential plots, in an effort to meet the unprecedented demand for this type of property and to aid in solving the housing problem.

The new owners plan the erection of an artistic bridge from the mainland to the islands, and arrangements are being made for the erection of houses on a scientific plan.

The owners have been holding the property at $1,000,000, but it is understood that the new corporation is to take it over at $750,000.

Hebrew National Orphan House Buys Odd Fellows Property.

A deal, which had been pending for some time, was consummated yesterday, whereby the United Odd Fellows' Home and Orphanage Association sold its property, situated at Tuckahoe, N. Y., comprising nineteen acres of land, consisting of several modern buildings, including a four-story administration building, dormitories, and several other buildings, to the Hebrew National Orphan House

The price paid for this property is reported to be in the neighborhood of $400,000.

The Hebrew National Orphan House is now located at 52 St. Marks Place, and in acquiring this new property will have room for the housing of over 400 orphaned children.

Greenfeld & Saffir and O'Hara Brothers negotiated the sale.

Insurance Company Sells Lofts.

Heller & Sussman, operators, bought the five-story house, 38 by 100, 1,312 and 1,314 Washington Avenue, held at $45,000, from a Mr. Solomon. The same firm sold 1,981 Marmion Avenue, a five-story apartment, 50 by 100, held at $58,000, to an investor.

Moses Levy sold a three-story brick two-family house, on lot 20 by 80, at 1,996 Morris Avenue, near 179th Street, to a client of J. Clarence Davies.

Walter Winkler sold the three-story and basement building at 1,704 Anthony Avenue, running through to Carter Avenue, through Richard D. Pirner, who also secured a first mortgage for the purchaser.

Isidore Zimmer and Samuel Reznick purchased from Henry W. Gennerich eight five-story apartment houses, each on plot 38.6 by 100, occupying the block front on the east side of College Avenue, between 166th and 167th Streets, held at $300,000.

Lydia Patterson sold 234 and 236 East 178th Street, two four-story apartment houses, 100 by 100.

The Zem Land Company sold 1,075 Simpson Street, a five-story new-law apartment, 37.6 by 100, through O'Reilly & Dahn and James E. Barry of the Knap & Wasson Company.

Brooklyn Transactions.

The Artee Realty Corporation sold two two-family brick houses at 1,124 and 1,128 Forty-second Street, Borough Park, to Simon Golden through Realty Trust.

William G. Stein sold the property at 2,508 Pitkin Avenue to Joseph and Mary Keihe through A. A. Hageman.

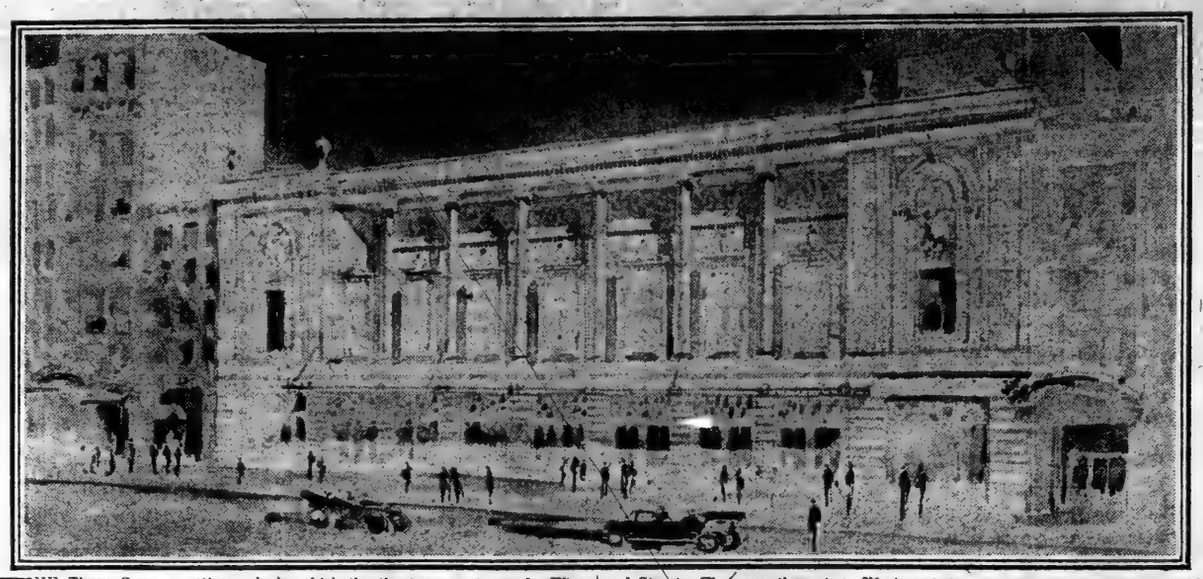
Della W. Hill sold an eight-family apartment house at 5,622 Fourth Avenue to a client of Martin A. Ansbro, for investment. The same broker sold a two-family house at 547 Sixty-second Street for F. X. Jagocki and a two-family house at 855 Fifty-ninth Street for John H. Perry.

Henry Cunningham sold the two-story and basement brownstone two-family dwelling, on lot 20 by 100, at 1,292 Bergen Street, to a client of the Bulkley & Horton Company, for occupancy.

Anna M. Varvaro sold the one-family cottage, on plot 60 by 100, at 1,102 Fifty-seventh Street to Victorio Grillo through B. J. Sforza.

TWO NEW THEATRES FOR TIMES SQUARE SECTION IN COURSE OF CONSTRUCTION AT COST OF $2,000,000

New Structures Will Increase Total of Playhouses in the District to Fifty-three—Ten Houses on Forty-second Street, Between Broadway and Eighth Avenue —Realty Values Keep Pace With Improvements



THE Times Square section, which is the greatest theatrical centre in the world, is to have three new theatres which will bring the total up to about fifty-three high-class houses.

Ground for two of the new houses was broken last week on Forty-second Street and a third house is projected on the site of Westover Court, the Astor property, in the rear of the Putnam building, Broadway, Forty-third to Forty-fourth Street, all of which was purchased recently by the Robert E. Simon Syndicate.

The two new houses now in course of construction are to be known as the Times Square and the Forty-second Street. They are to be located on the north side of West Forty-second Street, adjoining the Lyric Theatre and directly across the street from the New Amsterdam Theatre.

In association with Aaron Naumburg, Selwyn & Co. recently secured title from Sperry & Hutchinson to the plot on which the theatres are to stand. When ready, both theatres will be under the management of Selwyn & Co.

A $2,000,000 Operation.

The negotiations leading to the purchase of the property and the erection of the theatres, which involves an investment of close to two million dollars and is onen of the largest theatrical enterprises undertaken in the city in several years, were carried on by Crosby Gaige, Vice President of Selwyn & Co.

The theatres are to be alike in construction, and will be built of ornamental brick, granite, and terra cotta. They have been designed by De Rose & Peraira, with George L. Keister acting as consulting architect.

When completed, the Times Square will have a seating capacity of 1,200, and the Forty-second Street of 1,100. The theatres, which are to have adjoining entrances, stand on a plot which has a frontage of 105 feet on West Forty-second Street. They run through to West Forty-third Street, where the frontage is 100 feet. The total depth of the plot is 200 feet 10 inches.

The construction work on the buildings is being done by the O'Day Construction Company. According to present plans, both theatres will be ready for their opening by the 1st of December next.

The new structures represent the last word in theatres. Each contains numerous innovations. Perhaps the most important improvement to be noted in connection with the new building will be what in effect amounts to air cushions built on the street sides. The result will be to render the auditoriums practically soundproof.

Fire exits will open into broad passageways on the sides of the theatres, making it possible to empty each theatre in a matter of seconds.

In the Times Square entrance to the balcony will be effected by what is known in buildings as the "cross-over." This, in effect, is a series of entrances to balconies, just half the distance holders of tickets to that part of the theatre are now obliged to travel.

Another innovation will be smoking rooms—for both men and women. The Times Square in the first four rows of the balcony will have arm chairs instead of the usual orchestra seats.

Ten Theatres on One Block.

The completion of the two theatres will make a total of ten dramatic houses on the one city block, by far a greater number than are to be found in a single city block anywhere else in the world. Of the ten, Selwyn & Co. will control four, the two new ones, the Selwyn Theatre, completed only last year, and the Harris Theatre.

With the three new theatres a few feet from Broadway, the permanency of Times Squnre as the theatrical centre of the city will be even more effectually established. Yet with so many amusement houses grouped within a few blocks the managers evidently do not believe that the Square is congested, judging from the rapidity with which new houses are announced.

With the building up of the theatrical centre and the northward movement of trade in general has come a wonderful increase in real estate values. This is especially true of the Broadway properties and the corners.

The block front on the east side of Broadway, between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Streets, occupied by the New York and Criterion Theatres, has some interesting real estate history. In 1860, before the widening of Broadway, the records show that it was transferred to Robert T. Ford, the depth being 108 and 125, respectively, for $32,500.

When Oscar Hammerstein built the theatre he acquired some extra property on Forty-fifth Street, so the depth now is 154.8 on that street and 101.2 on Forty-fourth Street. Mr. Ford, who was a Kentucky man, built a market there, and the upper floor was used for some time as an armory.

Oscar Hammerstein was forced to part with the property under foreclosure in 1896, and it was bought in by the New York Life Insurance Company for $967,400.

Several years later it was acquired for a trifle over $1,000,000 by the Sire brothers. It is now owned by a theatrical syndicate known as the New York Theatre Company, and is assessed at about $2,225,000. It has been in the market for some time at about $4,000,000, and although there have been frequent rumors that it was about to change hands for an elaborate hotel improvement, the negotiations have not yet reached any tangible result.

Early Auction Prices.

A few other prices for property on Broadway, in the Times Square district, culled from the early auction and conveyance records, are: A plot, west side, 20.11 by 81.3 and irregular, 19.10 feet north of Forty-first Street, sold for $15,000 in 1874; the southeast corner of Forty-seventh Street, 20 by 80, in 1877 for $18,000; the old Metropole Hotel plot, now covered by the Heidelberg Building, was bought at auction early in the 80s for $122,000; the plot at 1,436 Broadway, 22.11 by 73.9 and irregular, between Fortieth and Forty-first Streets, in 1877 for $24,100; the seven-story building at 1,418 Broadway, between Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Streets, 25.7 by 114, known in 1886 as the St. John's Apartment, was sold at auction in that year for $71,000; the southeast corner of Fortieth Street, 25.7 by 118 for $54,100 in 1883; a plot 27.9 by 128 and irregular on the northwest corner of Fifty-seventh Street, sold in 1880 for $60,000; the southeast corner of Fifty-eighth Street, 27.5 by 116 and irregular, in 1876 for $28,000; five lots on the southeast corner of Fifty-ninth Street, 104.3 by 114.10 and irregular, in 1878 for $72,500; the southwest corner of Fifty-seventh Street, 54.3 by 151 and 100, sold in 1883 for $115,000, the buyer being Charles H. Bliss, who erected the Rutland Apartment House at a cost of more than $500,000.

BUILDING LOAN BODIES FAVOR HOME LOAN BANK

Inquiries concerning the plan for organizing a system of Federal home loan banks are coming into the United States Department of Labor from all parts of the country, and general interest is manifested in the provisions of the bill to be introduced at this session of Congress.

The impression exists in some minds that the banks when established would make direct loans of Government funds to persons desiring to build homes. This is a mistake. The plan contemplates the organization of Federal home loan banks as Clearing Houses for building and loan associations, which would then be able to realize on their long-time mortgages, and thus to meet increased demands for loans. The associations clearing through these banks would be stockholders in the institutions.

According to the plan a group of building and loan associations could combine for the organization of a Federal home loan bank, in which they would deposit a block of mortgages taken in the regular course of business. Against these mortgages the bank would issue bonds up to 50 per cent. of the value represented. The bank would sell these mortgages in the market, turning over the proceeds to the association which had deposited them, the association executing a note to the bank for the amount thus received.

The mortgages thus deposited as security are not to be sold by the association to the bank, but would remain the property of the association, which would continue to collect the regular payments from the borrowing members whose mortgages have thus been deposited, just the same as before the deposit was made.

If a borrower whose mortgage had thus been hypothecated pays off his loan in full, the association would recall that mortgage from the bank either by turning over the cash value of the mortgage to the bank to be applied on the debt of the association or by depositing another mortgage of equal value.

The bonds of the Federal home loan banks would not draw more than 5 per cent. interest per annum, and it is believed that they can be sold at a lower drawing rate, possibly 4 or 4½ per cent. The association would pay to the banks interest on the amounts advanced at the same rate which the bonds bear, an additional one-half per cent. per annum being allowed to cover the expenses of maintaining the banks. Associations would make semi-annual payments on the money borrowed, thus amortizing their debts. It is suggested that the bonds should run twenty years, associations being permitted to repay their loans at any time within that period.

In the Federal home loan bank plan the affiliation of an association would be entirely optional, and an association which does not join in the banking plan would not be affected in any way by the new system.

The business of the banks would be conducted by Boards of Directors elected by member associations. It is the purpose to provide for the supervision of the entire system of banks by such Federal authority as Congress may approve. This Federal supervision would be exercised at the expense of the Government as is the case with the Federal Farm Loan system and the Federal Reserve Bank system.

The movement to establish a system of Federal home loan banks was started when after-the-war revival of building in all parts of the country demonstrated the need of a method by which money could be realized on the long-time mortgages held by the building and loan associations.

To obtain information regarding the present condition of building and loan associations in all parts of the country and to ascertain the sentiment in regard to the establishment of Federal Home Loan Banks, the United States Department of Labor recently sent out a questionnaire, the returns from which contain valuable information on the building situation.

According to the questionnaire returns, 63 per cent of the associations are now being offered more business than at this period of last year. Many of the reports show increases of from ten to fifteen hundred per cent over 1918 in the volume of business.

Forty per cent of the associations report that ordinary receipts are insufficient to supply the demands for desirable loans. One-half or more of the associations in the States of Connecticut, Michigan, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin are reported to be thus hampered.

The opposition to the proposed Federal Home Loan Bank measure, which is designed to enable building and loan associations to realize on their long-time mortgages and thus to meet increased demands for loans, is comparatively slight, less than 10 per cent of the associations queried having opposed the plan, many of the adverse opinions having been accompanied by the admission that the exact object of the Federal Home Loan Banks was not understood.

The following table, compiled from the questionnaire returned to the United States Department of Labor, shows conditions as reported from 1,211 associations representing twenty-five States and the District of Columbia:

$1,500,000 Building for Brooklyn.

Among tangible evidences that the building situation is becoming more active is the announcement made yesterday that the Flatbush Industrial Corporation will begin at once the erection of a six-story and basement light manufacturing building to cost $1,500,000, on a plot of ground fronting 600 feet on Thirty-seventh Street, 240 feet on Thirty-sixth Street, and 200 feet on Fourteenth Avenue, Brooklyn. In connection with this transaction S. W. Straus & Co. have underwritten an issue of $1,000,000 first mortgage serial 6 per cent. bonds. The property is appraised at $1,650,000.

The new building will be completed by Jan. 1, 1920. Its erection is of particular importance at this time, as there is a noted shortage in Brooklyn of buildings suitable for light manufacturing purposes. It is estimated that the building will have a gross annual rental of $200,000. Twenty per cent. of the floor space has been leased to H. W. Cotton & Co., Inc., manufacturers of precision lathes and other similar machinery. This corporation guarantees the mortgage. H. W. Cotton is President of this company.

The Witherbee Real Estate and Improvement Co. sold nine lots on the corner of Highbrook and Witherbee Avenues, Pelham, to John B. Chambers, through Fish & Marvin. The same brokers sold for Howard E. Greenley his large stucco residence in Pelham Manor, held at $50,000, to William Churchill.

MR. DELANEY TALKS OF TRANSIT WORK

In Six Months He May Be Able to Say When the Dual System Will Be Completed.

HE SELECTS HIS COUNCIL

Rapid Transit Expert Discusses New Lines—City Many Years Behind in Transit Needs.

John H. Delaney, the Transit Construction Commissioner, said yesterday that the Board of Estimate had promised to cordially co-operate with him to the utmost to the end that the dual system of rapid transit might be completed and in operation by the end of 1920, the time set by the old commission. He also said that he would strive to advance the time, but that it would take him upward of six months to get affairs arranged so that the work would be progressing at the maximum rate.

He explained the manifold difficulties with which he was confronted, not the least of them being the fact that many of the contractors had exhausted all of their available capital in trying to keep the work going at wartime prices plus the difficulty of getting steel. He spoke of bits of rapid transit construction in outlying sections of Brooklyn which had to be completed before any part of the lines could be placed in operation, and how this delay kept idle millions of dollars' worth of work.

He explained that he had found some trouble in getting a good view of the entire problem that it was his work to solve because of the vastness of the dual system and the sometimes conflicting views of those working with him. One of his troubles, he said, was to get legal advice on the many subjects constantly arising and which would breed trouble in the future if the right proceedings were not taken at the start.

"I have been asked many questions by newspaper men," he said, "concerning my attitude on the fare question and in what direction I thought extensions to the dual system should take. To all of these inquiries I have replied that the fare question is not before me and that I shall not concern myself with any new lines until I can state a time when the present system will be completed. That will not be for perhaps several months."

Talks with employes of both Commissioner Delaney and Commissioner Nixon, who is in charge of all regulatory matters, indicate that there has been some study made of the directions in which additions and extensions to the dual system will take. In his talk with the reporter of THE TIMES, Mr. Delaney pointed out that the completion of the present transit plans would tend to divert travel in certain directions, and that until these changes in the tides of travel were made it would be somewhat difficult to state what new lines would be needed.

An expert on the matter said that extensions of the lines already planned would have to follow the beaten routes.

"This means," he said, "plans for new lines will reach outlying sections in Brooklyn, the Bronx, and Queens and will have to parallel the present lines in order to meet the demands created by the dual system, instead of piercing sections that are awaiting development. Another reason for increasing the transportation facilities along present lines is that the operating companies would be less eager to invest money in lines that would have to wait for the maximum of traffic instead of investing money in lines where the traffic was awaiting the transportation.

"Within the city limits there are many acres that are very remote and almost barren of habitations. Much of this land is covered with woods, and the owners are hanging on to it in the hope that in the near future it will bring large prices. These owners are clamoring for handy means of reaching their property, but their voices are faint in the clamor of those owning undeveloped property in sections within handy reach of lines already laid out."

Attention was called to the fact that prior to the war transportation needs were at least ten years behind the population, and that, counting the delays due to the war, it is now probably fourteen years in arrears. It was said that the only thing the city could reasonably hope for was that the congestion would not grow worse, and that the improvements contemplated would keep it from increasing.

It was said that the population of the city was growing at the rate of more than 90,000 a year, and that if the transportation facilities were only ten years behind the demand they were inadequate to supply the needs of a population of about 2,000,000. The expert who discussed the matter added:

"This being the case, no one can wonder at the congestion that makes traveling in the subways and elevated lines so uncomfortable, not to say unseemly, during the rush hours. I can promise that there will be no delay in adding to the transportation systems of the city that can possibly be avoided. The city administration is keenly alive to the situation."

Concerning the direction of new lines of transit, it was said that there has been some agitation in favor of an extension of the present tracks in Forty-second Street, that now terminate at Times Square, as far west as the Hudson River, so as to make a continuous line between Queens and the extreme west side with a possible connection via tunnel with the New Jersey shore. There has also been talk of extending the Broadway subway, operated by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, from Fifty-ninth Street, where it now turns east, as far north along Eighth Avenue to the Bronx, and for the extension of the rapid transit system to Staten Island.

Real estate men operating in Manhattan are opposed to any further development of outlying sections until Manhattan is developed to the utmost along residential lines. It was pointed out that large areas in the Greenwich and Chelsea sections were practically unpopulated for the reason that many blocks are occupied by little old-fashioned two-story buildings.

New Jersey Sales.

J. Frank Davis sold his former residence at 321 High Street, northwest corner of Bleecker Street, opposite the Newark Orphan Asylum, consisting of a plot 40 by 107, having thereon a handsome brick residence, to Dr. William Henry Washington, who has taken possession of the premises for residence and office purposes. Louis Schlesinger, Inc., was the broker.

$500,000 BUILDING LOAN.

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. Finances Queensboro Apartments.

Edward A. MacDougall, President of the Queensboro Corporation, owner and developer of the Jackson Heights apartment-house section and of about 100 city blocks in the immediate vicinity, has obtained a home-building and permanent loan of $500,000 from the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, Walter Stabler, Controller, for the construction of an additional block of high-grade garden type apartment houses, on plans prepared by George H. Wells. This is the second large loan obtained within the last two weeks by the same corporation for immediate building operations of similar character at Jackson Heights.

The first loan, which was in approximately the same amount, ($500,000,) was made about a fortnight ago, as previously reported, by the Title Guarantee and Trust Company for the construction of sixteen four-story, semi-detached apartment houses to contain 144 suites of four, five, and six rooms each, at a total of about $900,000, including the value of the land, in the block bounded by Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth Streets, Roosevelt and Polk Avenues.

The loan just made by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company provides for the construction of eleven five-story buildings, of garden type, to contain 185 suites of three, four, five, and six rooms each, at a total cost of approximately $1,000,000, including the value of the land, in the block bounded by Twenty-first and Twenty-second Streets, Pell and Fillmore Avenues. In the case of this notable building operation, the interior garden will be 445 feet in length. Some of the houses will be ready for occupancy in the Autumn.

With the consummation of these two large and timely loans, two of the largest and most prominent institutions lending merely on bond and mortgage have given substantial support to the apartment building movement.

The two new blocks of apartment houses at Jackson Heights will introduce some most interesting and pleasing architecture and construction ideas. Aside from the extension of each suite through from "street to garden" there will be loggias, foyers, and sufficient hall space to enhance the atmosphere of privacy aimed at by the builders and architect. The buildings will be erected in units of two, with wide "sunlight and air" space between each unit. The Twenty-seventh Street block design will be a simplified combination of the elements of the Spanish renaissance, with less than 40 per cent. of each site occupied by the building and each unit to be not less than 80 nor more than 120 feet in width, the Twenty-first blending with Colonial.

While the successful negotiation of these two large loans is of great interest not only to Queens, but to apartment tenants in all sections of New York, particularly to those among the building loan operators who "keep their ear to the ground," of equal interest is the decision of the Queensboro Corporation to sell its old and new houses at Jackson Heights in the Borough of Queens to tenants under a "collective ownership and rent insurance" plan to those who seek permanency of location, stability of rental, and freedom from "profiteering" tactics.

The first group of houses to be offered under this plan is the Colonial apartments at 154 to 168 Twenty-fifth Street, located in the thoroughfare that leads direct to the Twenty-fifth Street and Roosevelt Avenue station of the Corona elevated division of the dual transit.

FOUR-FAMILY FLATS.

New Law Permits Conversion of Four-Story Dwellings.

The bill permitting the conversion of existing four-story and basement houses into tenement houses for four families was passed at the extraordinary session of the Legislature called on Monday last under an emergency message from Governor Smith.

While this bill was amended in minor particulars, it is substantially the bill which the Real Estate Board of New York had introduced by Senator Dodge in January, except that it omits reference to three-story houses for three families, which the Legislature evidently considered adequately provided for in the recently passed Burlingame bill.

The Real Estate Board originated this legislation, which is so essential at this time, on account of the housing shortage by having introduced in the Legislature a year ago a bill providing for the conversion of three or four family houses.

This bill failed of passage, and this year the Real Estate Board joined with the Brooklyn Real Estate Board and the Tenement House Commissioner and others in framing the Dodge bill.

In the meantime the Burlingame bill permitting three-story houses to be altered, providing that they did not exceed a depth of fifty-two feet, was passed by the Legislature this year.

While this bill is a step in advance, there is unfortunately a gap left, inasmuch as it is possible now to alter a four-story house not exceeding sixty feet in depth, but it is impossible to alter a three-story house unless it is less than fifty-two feet in depth.

This apparent discrepancy will presumably be corrected at another session.

Representatives of the Real Estate Board appeared at Albany at the Senate committee hearing in favor of the Dodge bill, and it is very gratifying that Legislature, upon the urgent recommendation of the Mayor's Committee on Taxation and at the solicitation of the Governor, passed this bill, as it will permit owners of four-story brownstone houses to alter them at a reasonable cost to relieve the housing shortage and at the same time improve their earnings.

The amendments to the Dodge bill are of minor consequence, consisting in the main of the elimination of the interior room which the Dodge bill permitted, and more adequate fire protection for the stair hall.

While these two points were considered of vital importance to some, they are in reality of very little consequence, inasmuch as the provisions of the Dodge bill were thoroughly adequate and not out of harmony with the spirit of the Tenement House act.

At the same time, however, there is nothing in these amendments which should prevent owners from immediately starting alterations under the bill as passed.

A $300,000,000 BUDGET.

Property Owners Are Asking Questions About the 1920 Tax Rates.

What will the 1920 tax rate be? This question is being asked and discussed by property owners in view of the fact that the city administration with a $300,000,000 budget staring it in the face started last week the work of making up financial estimates.

That it will be the biggest budget in the history of Greater New York is admitted by leading city officials, one of whom said:

"It would not surprise me to see next year's budget approximate $300,000,000. Despite the efforts of the present city government to reduce the cost of running the municipal household, and the cutting out of all items of expenditure not essential to the welfare of the city, the 1920 budget is bound to be very much larger than this year's, chiefly on account of mandatory legislation at Albany.

"The increase in the teachers' salaries alone offsets the economies achieved by the Hylan administration."

The Budget Committee decided to cut out all red tape and make up the 1920 budget along the lines that would be adopted by a big private corporation. There will be fewer "forms." The enormous waste of the most expensive kind of white paper that has heretofore marked budget making is to be eliminated.

No definite mode of procedure has yet been adopted by the Budget Committee. But there will be no sub-budget committees. Every question relating to the 1920 budget will be decided by the main committee, which includes all the members of the Board of Estimate.

Whether or not the big 1920 budget will make an increase in the present tax rate necessary is a moot question. Some of those who have made a study of the situation believe that there is bound to be an increase, while others claim that the new sources of revenue uncovered by Mayor Hylan's Committee on Taxation will outweigh the addition to the budget and that, therefore, an increase in the tax rate will not be necessary.

Suburban Plots at Auction.

Residential properties in Westchester County, N. Y., and Fairfield County, Conn.; two plots at Greenwich, Conn., and a dwelling at Mamaroneck, are to be sold at auction by Bryan L. Kennelly as follows:

The two properties at Greenwich, Conn., are to be sold on July 2 at 14 Vesey Street, and are located, respectively, on the west side of King Street and at the southeast corner of King Street and Round Hill Road. The first consists of nine and one-half acres and belongs to the estate of John H. Shults; the corner offering consists of twenty-two acres, belonging to the estate of Charles E. Lounsbury.

The Mamaroneck holding, to be sold on the premises on Saturday, June 28, at 2 P. M., is the estate of Jacob Mayer, a two-story frame dwelling on a plot located on the west side of Mamaroneck Avenue and the Boston Post Road.

Also, on July 2, at 14 Vesey Street, Mr. Kennelly will sell 804 Fifth Street, Manhattan, a tenement, and the frame dwelling, 100 by 100, at 2,266 Andrews Avenue, in the University Heights section of the West Bronx.

Government Urges Building.

The War Department, through Colonel Arthur Woods, is urging State, city, and county officials to push work on public buildings in order to provide jobs for returning soldiers and sailors. There has been a gratifying response to this advice, because it is universally felt that the immediate return of ex-service men to suitable employment is of the utmost importance. In commenting on the possibilities of this means of reconstruction, Colonel Woods says:

"Every contract which is let makes more work in the forests, at the mines, in the quarries, and at the railroads, in addition to the labor requirements of the operation itself, and this means more jobs for returning soldiers and sailors."

NEW APARTMENT AT BRONXVILLE, N. Y.

GERMANS VOTE, 237 TO 138, TO SIGN TREATY; MAKE RESERVATIONS, WHICH PARIS REJECTS, ON WAR RESPONSIBILITY AND KAISER'S TRIAL

LEAGUE OPPONENTS ABANDON FIGHT FOR KNOX RESOLUTION

FALL BACK ON ROOT PLAN

Leader Favors Awaiting Treaty, But Qualifying Resolution May Be Put in Before.

RADICALS ARE COLD TO IT

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—After a conference with Senator Knox today, Senator Lodge, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, indicated in a dictated statement that the fight for Mr. Knox's resolution calling on the Peace Conference to insert a clause in the treaty of peace giving the United States and other nations the right to withhold joining the League until after the treaty is signed had been abandoned.

Mr. Lodge stated that the Knox resolution would not be called up in the Senate "at this moment," owing to the pressure of appropriation legislation. He regarded the Knox measure, he said, "as growing stronger daily," because of the necessity for amending the League of Nations if it is to be made acceptable to the United States.

Senator Lodge pointed out that the urgency for amendments to the League covenant was accentuated by the letter written by ex-Senator Elihu Root to Senator Lodge in which Mr. Root suggested that, if the covenant were not separated from the treaty, the Senate pass a qualifying resolution to embrace points of objection, including, as Mr. Root suggested, the elimination of Article X, touching upon the guarantee of territorial integrity and political independence of member nations.

There is every indication that the Peace Treaty will have been signed before the appropriation bills can be gotten out of the way in the Senate. Passage of the Knox resolution after the signing of the treaty, would be too late to achieve the object aimed at. The announcement of Senator Lodge, following Mr. Root's letter to him, was generally interpreted as meaning that the fight for the Knox resolution had been abandoned. It was construed as meaning, as stated in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning, that the Republicans who had been supporting the Knox resolution and opposing the League of Nations would for the most part fall into line behind the Root plan for a qualifying resolution.

Statement by Senator Lodge.

Senator Lodge's statement follows:

"I am very strongly in favor of the Knox resolution. I think the League and the peace with Germany ought not to be interlocked. We ought to be able to ratify the peace with Germany at once and then give the proper discussion to the covenant of the League of Nations, which involves the entire future of the country.

"I should like to bring the Knox resolution to a vote at once, but, after consultation with Senator Knox this afternoon, I have come to the conclusion that with the present situation of the appropriation bills, and especially the Army bill, now, before the Senate, we ought not to press the Knox resolution at this moment, because it will lead to debate, and nothing should be allowed to interfere with the passage of the appropriation bills before July 1. We propose to pass them before that date and shall sit night and day if necessary to do it.

"I am more willing to accept this postponement because the resolution is growing stronger daily, and the absolute necessity of amending the League, if it is to be made safe for the United States and for the cause of peace, has just been freshly demonstrated in Senator Root's letter with extraordinary force."

Senator Lodge did not reveal what plan, if any, he had to bring the Root proposal before the Senate. Although Senator Lodge was reticent about it, the understanding prevailed that he did not favor offering a resolution embracing the Root idea until after the treaty of peace was before the Senate. Other Senators believed that the plan ought to be aired in the Senate, and from talk heard at the Capitol, it is re-

French Naval Service Reduced to Peace Footing

TOULON, June 21.—Vice Admiral de Bon, Chief of Naval Operations, today issued orders reducing the naval service to a peace footing.

The orders disband the Mediterranean mine-sweeper flotilla, except that a few vessels will remain in service to pick up stray mines.

PREPARE PALACE FOR PEACE SIGNING

800 WILL SEE CEREMONY

Seats Provided for 400 Guests on the Left of the Hall and for 400 Newspaper Men on Right.

VERSAILLES, June 22, (Associated Press.)—Arrangements already have begun to take shape at Versailles for the signing of the Peace Treaty. Orders have been given to have everything in readiness on Tuesday, although the ceremony, according to the Havas Agency, is not likely to take place before Thursday, at the earliest. The program of arrangements, so far as they have been settled, was submitted to Premier Clemenceau today.

The famous Gallery of Mirrors has received its final furnishings. The carpets have been laid and the ornamental table, with its eighteenth-century gilt and bronze decorations, has been placed in position on the dais where the plenipotentiaries will be seated.

Fronting M. Clemenceau's chair will be placed a small table, on which the diplomatic instruments will be laid. It will be to this table that each representative is called, in alphabetical order, to sign his name to the treaty and affix to it his Government seal. As there are 100 delegates, the ceremony is expected to take at least ninety minutes.

It is as yet uncertain whether M. Clemenceau will make a speech. It is considered as not unlikely that the Germans will raise a last protest at the moment of signing.

There will be room for 400 invited persons at the historic session. They will be given places in the left wing of the Hall of Mirrors, while the right wing will be occupied by about the same number of press representatives. Sixty seats have been allotted to the French press.

The Court of Honor has been cleared of captured guns. Three regiments of infantry and five of cavalry will be on duty at the time of the signing of the treaty. Republican Guards, in gala uniform, will be the guard of honor. They will be stationed on the grand staircase, by which the plenipotentiaries enter the hall.

The final preparations for the signing of the treaty will be discussed at a meeting at the prefecture here tomorrow. French officials are assuming that acceptance of the allied terms by Germany is certain.

Prefect of Police Raux of Paris has been assigned to take charge of the maintenance of order in Versailles. He will have a large force of gendarmes at his disposal, in addition to the troops, to control the crowds which undoubtedly will come to Versailles on the day the treaty is signed.

Only French representatives will be entrusted with the arrangements for the function, the allied and associated delegates being regarded as the guests of France.

According to the Havas Agency, diplomatic relations with Germany will not be resumed immediately on the signing of the treaty, but only after its ratification. This also applies to the admission of German subjects into France.

VERSAILLES, June 22.—A dispatch which was received with great interest by the members of the German delegation here was a wireless message announcing the sinking of the German warships in the Scapa Flow. This news was welcomed with expressions of keen satisfaction.

LONDON, June 22.—It is now learned that the responsibility for the scuttling of the German ships at Scapa Flow belongs to the German Admiral, von Reuter.

He informed the British commander that, believing the armistice terminated, he ordered the sinking of the ships in pursuance of orders given early in the war by the former Emperor that no German man-of-war was to be surrendered.

Von Reuter was made prisoner, and the remainder of the German crews have been interned.

"Have found a copy of Reuter's detailed orders of recent date for the sinking of the ships.

"There were six Germans killed and ten wounded yesterday, owing to their refusal to stop when called upon to do so."

Explosion Follows Ship's Sinking.

LONDON, June 22, (Associated Press.)—Early this morning a violent explosion occurred close to the spot where one of the German warships was sunk yesterday, says a Kirkwall dispatch to the Central News.

A huge column of water and much debris were thrown up. The single German warship which remained anchored last night has gone aground.

Arthur Pollen, the naval expert, in an interview in The Dispatch regarding the sinking of the German warships in Scapa Flow, admires the spirit of the Germans in sinking their ships rather than to allow them to pass into the possession of their enemie.

The article in The Dispatch recalls that a writer in an evening paper recently had practically prophesied the destruction of the German ships. The writer emphasized the ease of secreting demolition charges in a modern warship, adding, "Many people in the navy believe that the ships left Germany with dynamite charges already in position, and that when the decision of the Peace Conference was announced the Scapa Flow would be the scene of a big pyrotechnic display."

"The story is remarkable," said Lord Sydenham. "Explosives could not have been used, as they are believed to have been removed. Assuming that the Kings-

NEW GERMAN ENVOY NAMED

Haniel von Haimhausen Appointed to Conduct Peace Arrangements at Versailles.

PARIS, June 22, (Associated Press.)—Communications from the Germans to the Council of Five, relating to the vote of the Assembly at Weimar, reached President Wilson at 7:45 o'clock this evening and were immediately considered by the Council.

The Council received four notes from the Germans, which are supposed to have been prepared in advance and held to await advices from Weimar on the result of the meeting of the Assembly. President Wilson went at once to the residence of Premier Lloyd George, where the Council took up consideration of the notes.

One of these, from the new German Government, declared that Germany was ready to sign peace if the clauses making Germany responsible for the war and calling for the trial of the former Emperor were eliminated.

The Council remained in session until 8 o'clock in the evening, and then adjourned for dinner. The Council met again at 9 o'clock and after further brief consideration took its decision to reject the German request.

To the four notes sent by the German delegation a single reply was handed to Baron von Lersner of the German Peace Delegation at 10 o'clock tonight.

Von Lersner apparently was on the watch for the response, for the minute Colonel Henry, master of ceremonies at Versailles, arrived with the document, von Lersner was on the spot to receive it.

The note of the Allies stated that the time for discussion was past.

Unless full acquiescence is received from Versailles within twenty-four hours, it may be expected that the advance of the allied armies will be resumed.

Dispatches from Government agents and indications generally have created the impression in conference circles that the Germans will yield.

Only one of the four notes received dealt with changes demanded in the Peace Treaty. The others were of an informative character, relating to developments leading to the request for modifications.

The German Government has appointed Dr. Haniel von Haimhausen of the Peace Delegation to conduct the peace arrangements at Versailles.

It is understood that the Allies insist on absolutely unconditional acceptance of the terms, failing which, their armies will begin to advance Monday evening.

Advices from Weimar received by the American delegation this afternoon were to the effect that, no matter what the allied reply might be, the treaty would be signed.

A dispatch reaching the American Peace Delegation late yesterday afternoon from Weimar said a decision had been reached by the Germans to ask for further delay from the Allies, but that later the Social Democrats and Centrists found that they had a sufficient majority in the Text of the German Note to the Council of Four Stating That They Will Sign with Reservations

PARIS, June 22.—The German note, in which Germany agrees to sign the treaty, with two reservations, was received by the President of the Peace Conference at 5 o'clock this evening. The reply of the Allies, through the Council of Four, was transmitted to the German plenipotentiaries at Versailles.

The German note follows, being dated at Versailles June 22, and addressed to M. Clemenceau:

"The Imperial Minister of Foreign Affairs has instructed me to communicate the following to Your Excellency:

"The Government of the German Republic has from the moment when the peace conditions of the allied and associated governments were made known to it let no doubt exist as to the fact that the Government, in harmony with the whole German people, must regard these conditions as being in sharp contradiction to the principle which was accepted by the allied and associated powers on the one hand, and Germany on the other, as being binding in accordance with the laws of nations for the peace before the conclusion of the armistice.

"Relying upon this principle of justice, which was agreed upon between the parties to the negotiations, and assisted by a clear exposition of conditions in Germany, the Government has left no stone unturned in order to arrive at a direct verbal exchange of opinions and thus obtain some mitigation of the unbearably harsh conditions, which might render it possible for the Government of the German Republic to sign the treaty of peace without reservations and to guarantee its execution.

"These endeavors of the Government of the German Republic, which were undertaken in the interest of the peace of the world and the reconciliation of peoples, have failed owing to rigorous insistence on the conditions of peace.

"The counter-proposals of the German delegation have only in certain points received any acceptance. The concessions made only reduced the severity of the conditions in a small degree.

Says Defenseless People Are Threatened.

"The allied and associated Governments have, in an ultimatum which expires on June 23, confronted the Government of the German Republic with the decision either to sign the treaty of peace presented by them or to refuse to sign. In the latter case, a completely defenseless people have been threatened with the forcible imposition of the conditions of peace already presented and with the increase of heavy burdens.

"The German people do not wish for the resumption of the bloody war; they honestly wish for a lasting peace. In view of the attitude of the allied and associated Governments, the German people have no other force in their hands save to appeal to the eternally inalienable right to an independent life, which belongs to the German people, as to all peoples.

"The Government of the German Republic can lend no support to this sacred right of the German people by the application of force. The Government can only hope for support through the conscience of mankind. No people, including those of the allied and associated powers, could expect the German people to agree with thorough conviction to an instrument of peace whereby living members of the very body of the German people are to be cut off without consultation of the populations concerned, whereby the dignity of the German State is to be permanently impaired, and whereby unendurable economic and financial burdens are to be laid upon the German people.

"The German Government has received passionate expressions of opinion from the population in the districts to be cut off in the East, to the effect that they will oppose themselves to the separation of these districts, which have for the greater part been German for many centuries, by all means they possess. The German Government, therefore, finds itself compelled to decline all responsibility for any difficulty which may result from the resistance of the inhabitants against their separation from Germany.

"If the Government of the German Republic is, nevertheless, ready to sign the conditions of the Allies with the above mentioned reservation, yet this is not done of its free will. The Government of the German Republic solemnly declares that its attitude is to be understood in the sense that it yields to force, being resolved to save the German people, whose sufferings are unspeakable, a new war, the shattering of its national unity by further occupation of German territories, terrible famine for women and children, and mercilessly prolonged retention of the prisoners of war.

"The German people expects, in view of the grievous burdens which it is to take upon itself, that all German military and civilian prisoners, beginning July 1, and thereafter in uninterrupted succession and within a short period, shall be restored. Germany gave back her enemies' prisoners of war within two months.

[Continuation of the text of the German note will be found in later editions of THE TIMES.

Peremptory Reply of the Allies.

PARIS, June 22, (Associated Press.)—The reply to the German Delegation said:

"The present note of the German Delegation presents no arguments or considerations not already examined. The allied and associated Governments, therefore, feel constrained to say that the time for discussion is past.

"They can accept or acknowledge no qualification or reservation and must require of the German representatives an unequivocal decision as to their purposes to sign and accept as a whole, or not to sign and accept the treaty as finally formulated.

"After the signature the allied and associated powers must hold Germany responsible for the execution of every stipulation of the treaty."

BAUER COMPLAINS OF FORCE

ASSEMBLY UPHOLDS CABINET

Gives It a Vote of Confidence —First Bauer Cabinet Existed Only an Hour.

BERLIN, June 22, (Associated Press.)—Germany will sign the Peace Treaty of the allied and associated powers. The National Assembly this afternoon, by a vote of 237 to 138, decided to sign the treaty. Twenty-five members of the Assembly abstained from voting.

The Assembly also voted confidence in the new Government of Herr Bauer by 236 to 89. Sixty-eight members abstained from voting.

Germania in its issue today said that Foreign Minister Mueller would communicate at the session of the Assembly today the text of a note which, on approval by the Assembly, would be dispatched to the Peace Conference heads. The note, according to Germania, would decline to accept Article 231 of the Peace Treaty, dealing with Germany's responsibility for the war, and Articles 227 to 230, dealing with penalties.

Further, the note would affirm that President Wilson's Fourteen Points had not been applied in the Peace Treaty and would express regret that oral negotiations had been refused the Germans. It would also, according to the newspaper, emphasize the inalienable right of every nation, even Germany, to live, and say that Germany could not assent to the Peace Treaty from her inner conviction because it contained conditions impossible of fulfillment and unbearable.

Therefore, Germany would not sign voluntarily, but would only yield to force. It would add that since the economic and financial terms exceeded the limit of Germany's capacity to meet them, Germany would be unable to accept the responsibility for their execution.

Calls Burdens "Unbearable."

WEIMAR, June 22, (Associated Press.)—In announcing the decision of the Government to sign the peace terms, Premier Bauer said before the National Assembly today:

"The allied and associated powers cannot expect the German people to agree from inner conviction to a peace instrument whereby, without the populations being consulted, members are severed from the German Empire, German sovereignty permanently violated, and unbearable economic and financial burdens imposed upon the German people.

"The distress of the land and of the people has brought us together. We could not refuse co-operation unless we desired to run the risk of leaving Germany prey to a chaotic state, without Government and hopeless of salvation. You will believe me when I say we are not here to stand for the interests of our own party, and still less to satisfy our ambitions. We are here from the sense of duty to save that which is saivable."

Having expressed regret for the action of the Democrats, Herr Bauer formally presented the new Ministers and announced that the Cabinet's general program would remain identical with that of the Scheidemann Ministry.

Disclaims Partisan Spirit.

Coming to the question of signing the treaty or not, Herr Bauer said:

COBLENZ, June 21.—Marshal Foch has moved his headquarters to Kreuznach, south of Bingen, whence he will direct the allied march into Germany should the Germans fail to sign the peace terms. The Marshal has prepared for circulation among the Germans in the event of a forward movement a proclamation warning them against interference with the allied soldiers and setting forth punishments for sniping and other acts against our troops. The proclamation reads as follows:

"Order to the civil population:

"Allies entering into German territory will respect persons and property and will enable the German population to carry on their ordinary business, provided the safety, movement, billets, and supplies of the allied armies are fully guaranteed.

"All the personnel of the public administration must remain at their posts and continue to carry out their duties under the control of the allied armies.

"Any infraction of these orders will be punished in accordance with military regulations.

"All persons guilty of any hostility against the allied armies (whether in firing against allied troops or in destroying railways, roads and waterways or in cutting or damaging telegraphs or telephones or in communication with the enemy) are amenable to military law.

"Any house from which civilians shall have fired on the allied troops will be burned.

"In all communes all arms must be handed over to area commandant one hour after proclamation of this order.

(Signed) "FOCH."

Another order prescribes the prices to be paid by the allied armies for supplies requisitioned from the Germans.

Immense supplies of gasoline have been brought to the American bridgehead to insure ample supplies for the trucks in case the railroads prove insufficient. We have many times the ammunition that would be needed in the event of an unexpected German military resistance.

In fact, the preparations for a whirlwind dash into Germany have been made on a magnificent and elaborate scale, and after an inspection of our bridgehead, Marshal Foch has reported to Paris that the Americans are ready, as are the French and the British.

The American doughboys have become so keyed up by their preparations that they are now keen about their possible march ahead; and there will be some disappointment if it fails to materialize.

On the march toward Cassel the American advance would be led by the 1st Division, followed by the 3d Division, with the 3d Division holding the old bridgehead.

It is interesting to speculate what is going to happen to the myriad Germans in uniform should the American doughboys go running for German soldiers. In Germany all officials wear uniforms. A policeman looks like a General, and telegraph and telephone operators wear uniforms which differ in some cases but slightly from army uniforms. Street car conductors wear uniforms, railroad workers wear uniforms, and messengers wear uniforms. It is a good guess that American prison cages in case of an advance will be filled with all sorts of uniforms.

The German military machine appears to be going right ahead independently of the Assembly's action. The latest reports say that the Government's war material from the region in front of the Americans, as far as Cassel, continues to move to the maximum capacity of the limited railroad facilities.

COBLENZ, June 21, (Associated Press.)—More than half a million allied soldiers in the occupied areas stood ready Saturday night for a further invasion of Germany.

The troop concentration ordered by Marshal Foch has been completed up and down the Rhine, and every detail has been worked out for an advance, in the event that Germany does not accept the terms.

Even orders to the civilian populations, printed in French, English, and German as framed by Marshal Foch, are ready for distribution in the districts and villages taken over by the Allies.

About 100,000 Americans will move forward if the final order comes. The concentration just completed is America's greatest display of strength since the armistice.

FRENCH ARMY AWAITS RESULT

But Impression at Mayence Is That Germans Will Sign.

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.

By WALTER DURANTY.

MAYENCE, June 21.—It is the general impression here today that the Germans will sign the treaty without more ado. At the same time there is reported to be movements of troops and artillery and the concentration of airplanes behind the boundary between the Germans and the Allies. This, however, is not taken seriously and is considered to be a feeble attempt to bolster up a bluff of resistance.

Perhaps the most significant indication that peace will be signed is the sudden jump in the value of the mark since yesterday. Today the rate is 210 marks for 100 francs. Yesterday it was 245—a difference of nearly 15 per cent. This is alleged to be due to a heavy purchase of marks by the Rothschild interests, who are presumably in a position to know which way the cat is going to jump.

The inhabitants of Mayence express a great relief at the relaxed tension. The proprietor of one of the leading hotels said to one of my French colleagues this morning:

"It is all right. We are going to sign. Thank God for that! The nightmare is over."

The fact is the people here are very well treated under the French regime. Cafés and other public places shut at 10:30 at night and no one is supposed to be on the streets after 11, but provided they behave themselves there is considerable latitude permitted. They could hardly fail to view without anxiety the return to a state of siege that would follow a reversion to war conditions.

Meanwhile, the French are now fully prepared. Even the airplanes which conducted the postal service between Mayence and Paris have been ordered to rejoin its war formations since Tuesday last. From tanks to heavy artillery and from cavalry skirmishers to infantry of the line the whole French war machine only needs a finger-touch on the trigger to burst into instant activity.

200 Reported Killed in Fergus Falls By Tornado That Hit Western Minnesota

ST. PAUL, June 22.—Two hundred persons were killed and hundreds of buildings destroyed tonight by a tornado which swept through Fergus Falls, Minn., according to dispatches from nearby towns. Fire started after the tornado had passed over.

The storm struck that city of 7,000 population about 7 o'clock, destroying, among other buildings, the Grand Hotel, within which, it is said, seventy-five persons were trapped when it collapsed.

Reports say the Great Northern depot at Fergus Falls also was blown down and many persons killed.

The telephone operator at Battle Lake, eighteen miles west of Fergus Falls, said the tornado demolished all buildings between the Grand Hotel in the eastern part of the city, and a brewery in the western section.

The Great Northern's Oriental Limited, westbound to Seattle, was blown from the track about twenty miles west of Fergus Falls, but only one passenger was seriously injured.

Seven of the eleven cars were hurled from the rails. A baggage car was torn out and set down about thirty feet from the rails and at right angles to them.

Telegraph wires are prostrated all through the section adjoining the Dakota line, and only meagre details of the damage in Fergus Falls can be gathered. Railroad men coming in say, however, that almost the entire city has been swept away.

tion carries away individuals and the community, and tries to find vent, but if on assuming my heavy office I may make a request, it is this: Do not allow the question of acceptance or rejection to become a party matter. Do not misjudge the advocates of rejection as chauvinists, pursuing selfish aims, or the advocates of acceptance under dire necessity as cowards or weaklings, void of the national sense of justice.

"On both sides are weighty reasons which no responsible man can overlook. A decision must be taken. The time for reflection is past. The hour for action has arrived, and in it each of you bears a responsibility.

"The Imperial Government is conscious that, despite all manifestations of confidence, it can in the eyes of the nation and history have only one real justification, namely, ruthlessly to take a decision after the examination of the facts and a responsibility without an eye on party feelings."

Herr Bauer added:

"Whatever the majority of the House may think concerning acceptance or rejection, in one matter we are unanimous, namely in sharpest condemnation of the treaty submitted to us, to which under unheard-of compulsion we are to give our signature.

"The whole nation as one man utters a passionate protest that we are being sacrificed without defence to the interests of other nations. The result of our protests and the result of our willingness to make reparation far exceeding all that fairness should demand have been very slight mitigations, and these have been accompanied by menaces and abuse.

"On Monday the war is to be begun afresh if we fail to give our 'yes.' Every instrument of murder is ready against a defenceless and unarmed nation which knows only two commandments—externally reparation and internally the development of liberty which it won in its collapse."

Declaring that by signing the treaty under reserve the Government yielded to force in order to spare suffering Germany from a new war and disruption of national unity by further occupation, starvation for the women and children and an unmerciful longer retention of German prisoners, Herr Bauer continued:

"But the Government expects, in view of the stupendous burden thus assumed, that all military and civilian prisoners will be returned without interruption, beginning July 1.

"At this solemn moment the Government desires to express itself with absolute clearness in order to meet beforehand any possible reproaches that the conditions imposed exceed Germany's power to perform, and we therefore decline all responsibility for the consequences that may befall Germany should her utmost endeavors prove the conditions impossible of fulfillment.

"We furthermore lay the greatest emphasis on the declaration that we cannot accept, and by our signature do not cover, Article 231, demanding that Germany confess herself the sole author of the war."

When the Assembly opened at noon all the members of the new Cabinet were present. Herr Bauer, in announcing the formation of his Ministry, heartily thanked the members of the retiring Cabinet, especially Philip Scheidemann, for their devoted and self-sacrificing labors. He added that thanks were also due to the members of the German Peace Delegation.

The Premier said that the resignation of the Scheidemann Cabinet was due to lack of a united front with regard to the draft of the peace terms, on which the Cabinet views were sharply divided. These dissensions went right through the ranks of the Government parties.

"To every one of us who belonged to the former Government," said Herr Bauer, "it was a bitter and hard fight between indignation and cool reflection. It was exceedingly hard for us to take the decision to join a new Government whose most urgent duty must be to conclude a peace of injustice."

FIRST BAUER CABINET LASTED ONLY AN HOUR

Bernstorff Helped to Upset It by Refusing to Take the Foreign Portfolio.

WEIMAR, June 21, (Associated Press.)—Germany acquired a new Cabinet only after nearly a week of literal sweating in blazing Weimar weather. The signing of the peace terms naturally was the only question around which the Cabinet construction hinged, and the Government, which went on record as considering the terms unacceptable, found a surprising following behind them.

The first party ballots, however, seemed to make the signing of the treaty inevitable, for the powerful Majority Socialist Party voted two-thirds for ending the suspense. With the Independents supporting them, the Conservatives as a party behind them, and the Centrists on the fence, the result appeared a foregone conclusion.

But the Conservatives suddenly swung around and declared for non-signature, the Centrists wavered and imposed conditions, and the Democrats temporarily balked any hope of a majority by stubbornly persisting against the extradition by the Entente of the former Emperor and other German notables. This was the stumbling block, for the Democrats could not be budged from the attitude which they held through a forlorn pride in the former War Lord and the belief that a revolution would break out in protest by the people should von Hindenburg, Ludendorff, and other idols also be humiliated.

Count von Bernstorff, the former Ambassador at Washington, played a prominent part in the proceedings, not only as President of the German Peace Committee, but, according to persistent rumor, as the possible successor of Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, for there was a powerful group that wanted him to suffer the poetic justice of signing the terms after he had helped to bring the United States into the war.

Count von Bernstorff, however, resisted, and after having been appointed in the morning to the Cabinet, headed by Herr Bauer, refused to accept the appointment or have anything to do with the matter.

Later in the day the Centrists dropped their demand for modification of the terms and expressed their willingness to sign. The Democrats also weakened to such an extent that fifteen of their sixty-five members in the Assembly went over to the side in favor of signature.

The first Ministry headed by Herr Bauer lasted exactly one hour. It crashed on the stubbornness of the Democrats and von Bernstorff's flat refusal to head the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Dr. Dernburg, who had been named as Minister of Finance, declared that he could not co-operate. The Democrats then reduced their demands to one point, on which they were adamant, namely, that the former German Emperor, von Hindenburg and Ludendorff must not be delivered to the Entente for trial.

Eventually the Bauer Cabinet was reconstructed, with Dr. Herman Mueller, the Majority Socialist Leader, as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mathias Erzberger as Minister of Finance and Vice Premier.

In his first speech in the afternoon Premier Bauer outlined his program to the Peace Committee of the Assembly. It was decided not to vote on the question of peace, since the Cabinet was distinctly a peace Cabinet, but to submit the question to the Assembly Sunday for ratification.

Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau will leave Weimar tomorrow for a vacation in his private capacity. Count von Bernstorff will go on a vacation Monday unless the new Cabinet needs his advice.

Gustav Adolf Bauer, the new Premier, had hitherto scarcely been mentioned for Philipp Scheidemann's position. Prior to his appointment as Labor Minister, he was Secretary of the labor unions of Germany. He is rated as a long-headed, conservative Socialist, who is reputed to have as much influence with the workingmen as Karl Legien, head of the German Trades Union Confederation. He was originally the choice of the Socialist groups.

BERLIN, June 21, (Associated Press.)—Gustav Adolf Bauer, who succeeds Philipp Scheidemann as Premier, is Second Chairman of the General Commission of the Federation of Labor Unions. He was elected to the Reichstag in 1912 from Breslau and appointed Minister of Labor under Prince Max last October. He is an authority on labor legislation and workers' insurance. He is a member of the National Assembly and was born in 1870.

The new Cabinet is regarded as purely transitional. The failure of von Bernstorff to accept the Foreign Ministry is ascribed in Berlin mainly to fear in official circles that his incumbency might provoke hostile comment in the United States. It is also reported that the Democrats informed him that acceptance would be equivalent to his retirement from the party.

Mr. Mueller, one of the younger forces of the majority parties, is wholly a newcomer in the arena of diplomacy. His only experience in this respect was gained in the recent Socialist conference at Berne, where he creditably represented the Scheidemann faction.

LONDON, June 22.—Commenting on the precarious life of the new Cabinet once peace is signed, the Reuter correspondent in Berlin says that a mere accident or a few abstentions may at any moment result in its defeat, as the Centrist and Socialist bloc, on which it depends, commands only 255 out of the 423 Deputies.

ARTICLES OBJECTED TO.

Four Related to Guilty Officials, One to War Responsibility.

The articles in the revised Peace Treaty to which the Germans are taking especial exception are five in number, running consecutively from 227 to 231 inclusive. The first four of these comprise the whole of Part VII. of the original treaty and presumably remain unchanged in the revised document. This part, which has as its title "Penalties," read as follows as originally drawn:

"ARTICLE 227.—The allied and associated powers publicly arraign William II. of Hohenzollern, formerly German Emperor, for a supreme offense against international morality and the sanctity of treaties.

"A special tribunal will be constituted to try the accused, thereby assuring him the guarantees essential to the right of defense. It will be composed of five judges, one appointed by each of the following powers: The United States of America, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan.

"In its decision, the tribunal will be guided by the highest motives of international policy with a view of vindicating the solemn obligations of international undertakings and the validity of international morality. It will be its duty to fix the punishment which it considers should be imposed.

"The allied and associated powers will address a request to the Government of the Netherlands for the surrender to them of the ex-Emperor in order that he may be put on trial.

"ARTICLE 228.—The German Government recognizes the right of the allied and associated powers to bring before military tribunals persons accused of having committed acts in violation of the laws and customs of war. Such persons shall, if found guilty, be sentenced to punishments laid down by military law. This provisions will apply, notwithstanding any proceedings or prosecution before a tribunal in Germany or in the territory of allies.

"The German Government shall hand over to the allied and associated powers, or to such one of them as shall so request, all persons accused of having committed an act in violation of the law and customs of war who are specified either by name or by the rank, office, or employment which they hold under the German authorities.

"ARTICLE 229.—Persons guilty of criminal acts against the nationals of one of the allied and associated powers will be brought before the military tribunals of that power.

"Persons guilty of criminal acts against the nationals of more than one of the allied and associated powers will be brought before military tribunals composed of members of the military tribunals of the powers concerned.

"In every case the accused will be entitled to name his own counsel.

"ARTICLE 230.—The German Government undertakes to furnish all documents and information of every kind, the production of which may be considered necessary to insure the full knowledge of the incriminating acts, the discovery of offenders, and the appreciation of responsibility."

The fifth article, which is the beginning of Part VIII, "Reparations," and is carried under the subtitle, "Section I.—General Provisions," read originally as follows:

"ARTICLE 231.—The allied and associated governments affirm, and Germany accepts, the responsibility of Germany and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies."

STEPS WHICH LED UP TO GERMAN DECISION

Events Crowded Thick and Fast from Time the Armistice Was Signed.

It was in June—the twenty-eighth—that the world war began five years ago. The murder in Serajevo of Archduke Francis Ferdinand was followed in rapid succession by Germany's declaration of war on Russia, the entry of the other allies, and the beginning of the huge struggle. For two years Germany and Austria held the advantage of their preparedness; for one year both sides fought evenly and tenaciously; then the tide turned and, with America turning the scales, the war steadily progressed toward allied victory until on Nov. 11 last the armistice was signed.

Soon after word flashed around the world that German pens had signed the armistice at dawn in Senlis came the news that the Grand Duke of Oldenburg had been dethroned and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin had abdicated. That afternoon, while New York, indeed the wide world, plunged into a celebration—a second Mafeking Day—that hailed victory, rather than peace, President Wilson appeared before Congress in joint session and, amid impressive scenes, read the terms of the armistice. In the House of Parliament, in the French National Assembly, the words that wrote finish to the years of struggle also were read. And before nightfall came the report of another dynasty toppled down, the dethronement of the ruler of Saxony.

In the weeks that followed, the work of the Soviets in Germany began to appear. Disorder prevailed in German countryside and city; guns that had faced the Allies stood at Berlin street corners, while armed mobs fired from windows or fought openly in the streets. An appeal was sent to President Wilson appealing for aid to save the German Government from "chaos." Out of the vital events that came with the succession almost of clock ticks during the stirring days immediately following the armistice came the news of the birth of the Republic of Czechoslovakia and the election of Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk to the Presidency of a nation of 11,000,000.

On Nov. 15 the first American troops to go into Germany, (airmen,) landed in Cologne, and that afternoon Secretary Baker issued the first order for the demobilization of our army. The next day, at the rate of twelve miles a day, the American Army of Occupation began the march into Germany. On Nov. 18 the announcement was made at the White House that President Wilson would take part in the Peace Conference to see that America's war aims, maintained at a cost of about 50,000 lives and $20,000,000,000, were protected. Two days following Marshal Pétain led his French legions into the German stronghold, Metz, amid scenes of wild rejoicing by the inhabitants.

With 235 first line ships in formation, the British Grand Fleet received the surrender of the flower of German sea-power on Nov. 21. With 500 allied guns ready to open broadsides on them from either side, the German ships passed into custody, out of the mist, at 9:30 o'clock, thirty miles east of May Island, and were conveyed back to the Firth of Forth between two great lines of British warships. The next day the homeward movement of American troops was begun.

On Nov. 29, it was announced that Kaiser Wilhelm, having relinquished his throne, had fled to Amerongen, Holland, where he became practically a prisoner. America's peace delegates, besides President Wilson, were announced to be Secretary of State Lansing, Henry White, Edward M. House, and General Tasker H. Bliss, and on Dec. 4, the party sailed on the steamship George Washington, arriving at Brest nine days afterward, where it was received with a great demonstration.

Early in the peace negotiations it became apparent that the President would stand strongly for the incorporation of the League of Nations in the Peace Treaty. It also was soon realized that Great Britain was one with the United States in this stand.

Although the earlier meetings of the Peace Conference passed off smoothly enough, dissensions began to crop up as the work of settling territorial questions and reparation was taken up. Long and stormy debates centered on the right of France to the Sarre basin, while Italy steadily increased the insistence of her right to Fiume. Although the conferees yielded slowly on the Sarre matter, Fiume was a stumbling block. Finally Premier Orlando announced his withdrawal and that of his colleagues from the conference. He went to Rome, conferred with the Italian leaders, and then returned, and the question of Fiume was settled.

Working steadily the terms of peace were drafted and presented in preliminary form to the German delegates, but no word officially reached the American public of the decisions of the conference. Mutterings were heard in the Senate, and then came the "peace leak," when it was learned that certain financial men had obtained advance copies of the treaty. While this was being investigated, THE NEW YORK TIMES and another newspaper published practically all of the treaty, the text having been brought into this country by a newspaper correspondent.

Several days ago the completed treaty was delivered to the National Assembly at Weimar, and the vote yesterday accepting the terms leaves only the actual signing of the document to be gone through before the last phase of the war can be said actually to have ended.

ALLIES REJECT ENEMY PLEA

Assembly and so decided not to sign a request for delay.

Hope for Signature on Wednesday.

In high quarters in the Peace Conference the belief was expressed yesterday that the signing of the treaty would take place Wednesday. There seemed to be no inclination to grant the Germans any delay, although it was recognized that if there was no German Government to deal with some delay would be inevitable.

The view of the members of the Council of Five after the meeting yesterday was that everything looked favorable to the signing of the treaty, and that it was even possible this function might take place Tuesday.

The newspapers today express the opinion that the new German Cabinet can do nothing else than sign the Peace Treaty. According to the Echo de Paris, a member of the Peace Conference asserted that a supplementary delay of forty-eight hours might be granted the Germans on condition that they promised to sign the document without modification.

NOTES EXCHANGED ON CONCESSIONS

EXPLAINED BY CLEMENCEAU

He Makes Clear Views of Allied Governments on Questions Raised.

PARIS, June 22.—The latest communications between the allied and associated Governments and the Germans on the Peace Treaty consist of a note by the Germans to the Allies, under date of June 19, and the answer of the Allies, under date of June 21. The German note, from Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau to M. Clemenceau, is forwarded from Versailles by Dr. Haniel von Haimhausen, in the name of the German delegation. It says:

"The examination of the four documents submitted on June 1 to the Commissary General of the delegation brings out the fact that a certain number of concessions are announced in the letter and in the memorandum, which are not found in the text, as changed by hand. Among the most important of these contradictions the German delegation has selected the following:

"(1.) It is stated on Page 7 of the memorandum that as Germany is admitted to the League of Nations she shall enjoy the benefits resulting from the stipulations relative to the freedom of commerce and transit. On the other hand, it is stated on Page 42 of the memorandum that for the minimum period of five years unilateral conditions in the matter of commercial relations would be imposed on Germany.

"(2.) It is stated on Page 11 of the memorandum that France will assume the public debt of Alsace-Lorraine.

"(3.) It is stated on Page 14 that for the plebiscite in Upper Silesia there shall be created a Commission Independente, (French in the text,) while according to the new draft of the conditions this commission is to be appointed solely by the allied and associated Governments.

"4. It is stated on Page 16, on the subject of the territory of Memel, that the cession of this territory will take place under the form of a transfer to the allied and associated powers because the status of the Lithuanian territories is not yet established. According to this provision Lithuania should be considered as the State to be the definite acquirer.

"5. According to Page 17 of the memorandum, the commission created for Heligoland by the allied and associated governments is to decide what installations are to be maintained for the protection of the land.

"6. On Page 21 of the memorandum it is promised that the German railways and mines of Shantung shall not be considered as property of the German State if the Germans can prove that they are private property.

"7. On Page 31 of the memorandum it is stated that the allied and associated governments are ready to submit, within one month after the treaty goes into force, a definitive list of the Germans to be surrendered to the enemy.

"8. On Page 33 it is stipulated that the Reparations Commission cannot exact the surrender of secrets of manufacture of other confidential information. It is, moreover, stipulated that it shall have no executive power on German territory and that it shall not interfere in the direction or supervision of German establishments.

"9. On Pages 34 and following, of the memorandum, a special procedure is provided to fix and cover the reparation exacted from Germany.

"10. On Page 36 of the memorandum Germany is promised facilities for the importation of food and raw materials.

"11. On Page 38 of the memorandum there are indicated, among the cases in which the granting of permission to export gold shall be considered, those in which the Reichsbank has furnished guarantees which it could not satisfy in any other way.

"12. On Page 53 of the memorandum the assurance is given that any liquidators appointed by the allied and associated governments who shall be guilty of punishable acts shall be prosecuted in conformity with the Penal Code.

"It is the duty of the German delegation to render an exact account to its Government and to the National Assembly, therefore it must know absolutely how far the enemy intends to give contract force to these concessions. It begs your excellency to confirm by writing the fact that the contents of the accompanying letter and the memorandum treating the above mentioned points constitute an integral part of the new peace propositions of the allied and associated Governments.

"In this it would be sufficient to establish this fact in a final protocol to the text, on which the contracting parties could come to a previous agreement. A doubt has also arisen concerning a second point when the documents submitted were examined.

"The printed copy of the peace project submitted to us is different not alone in the matter of manuscript corrections and additions from the printed copy that the Chairman of the German delegation received on May 7 from the Secretary General of the Peace Conference.

"By reason of the amount of work imposed on the delegation by the shortness of the time allowed for the examination, it has not yet been possible to compare word for word with this printed copy of May 7 this other single copy, which a great number of persons have had constantly to use.

"I am therefore obliged to reserve for the delegation the right to make later communications on this subject. For the moment I call your attention to the following divergencies:

"1. On Page 103 of the copy last sent, paragraph 2 contains a third alinea [section which begins with these words: 'Each Government.'] This alinea is lacking in the copy sent before.

"2. On Page 104 the English text of Paragraph 12 is different in the different copies. The paragraph of the first copies has only one alinea, while in the last copy it is divided into two alineas, the second of which begins with these words: 'The commission shall in general.'

"Naturally, the German delegation cannot consider as definite the changes in the text which are not made by hand, or which, on the other hand, have not the evident character of additions, unless the allied and associated governments confirm the fact that these divergencies are due to a falsely printed copy, not that they are the results of deliberate intention.

"In the latter case the delegation requests that all the divergencies having this character be announced to it before the expiration of the time limit granted to it to reach a decision. For reasons easily comprehensible, the delegation is obliged to attach the greatest importance to receiving an answer by return courier, if possible.

"BROCKDORFF-RANTZAU."

In his reply to Dr. Haniel von Haimhausen, whose forwarding note was dated June 20, M. Clemenceau, addressing him as Temporary Chairman of the German Delegation at Versailles, says:

"I have the honor of acknowledging receipt of your letter of June 20. In reply to this communication, the allied and associated powers hasten to inform you that the 200 copies of the peace conditions sent to the German Delegation on June 19 are to be considered as the authentic text, containing all the corrections and modifications made in the printed text sent on May 7, 1919, notably such changes and modifications as are the result of the various German observations."

M. Clemenceau, in a second note to the German delegation, says:

"In your letter of June 20 you called the attention of the allied and associated Governments to certain points, upon which, according to the German delegation, there is a divergence between the text of the treaty and the memorandum sent to you on June 16, 1919, in reply to the German observations.

"I have the honor to inform you that the views of the allied and associated Governments on these different points are as follows:

"1. The statement made on Page 7 of the memorandum, on the one hand, and on Pages 42 and 43 of the memorandum on the other, far from being contradictory, are complementary.

"The covenant of the League of Nations states that the members of the League will make the necessary provisions to insure the guarantee and the maintenance of the freedom of communication and transit, as well as just treatment of the commerce of all the members of the League. When Germany is admitted into the League she will share the advantages of these stipulations with the other countries. But during the transition period following peace it is necessary to take into account the special conditions stated on Page 42 of the memorandum.

"According to this statement, the obligations imposed on Germany have the character of measures of reparation, and their maintenance for a period of five years, far from being incompatible with the principle of just treatment is in view of insuring the application of this principle.

"The power given to the League of Nations by Articles 280 and 37 will be exercised in accordance with the same principle and in conformity with the spirit and the text of the covenant of the league.

"(2) The memorandum states on Page 11 that 'concerning the local debt of Alsace-Lorraine and the public establishments of Alsace-Lorraine the allied and associated powers have always agreed in understanding that France assumed them. Now, Article 55, combined with Article 255 of the treaty, is relative to the public debts of the 'German Empire and States,' and there is no clause exempting France from the payment of the local debt of Alsace-Lorraine. There is, therefore, no divergence between the memorandum and the treaty.

"3. The commission which has been provided for Upper Silesia, and which, according to Article XLV. of the treaty, is to be appointed by the principal allied and associated powers, is called in the memorandum a 'commission independente—separate commission,' in order to explain that it is a commission specially charged with the mission mentioned in the aforesaid Article XLV. It does not appear that there is in this matter any divergence whatever between the treaty and the memorandum.

"5. Concerning the destruction of the fortifications of Heligoland, the principal allied and associated powers intend, as they explained on Page 17 of the memorandum, to appoint a commission to exercise this control, in conformity with the treaty. This commission will have the power to decide what part of the works protecting the coast against the erosion of the sea shall be kept, and what part shall be destroyed.

"6. The allied and associated powers think it their duty to point out that they have never declared that the German railways and mines of Shantung shall not be considered as property of the German States, if the Germans can prove that they are private property.

"On the contrary, the allied and associated powers consider them to be public property; nevertheless, if Germany can prove that her nationals hold shares in these enterprises, they shall receive the benefit of the general principles established in the treaty for such matters.

"(7.) As stated on Page 31 of the memorandum the allied and associated powers intend to address to the German Government, within a month after the treaty comes into force, a list of the persons whom, in accordance with Article 228, Line 2, Germany is to surrender to the allied and associated powers.

"(8.) The allied and associated powers, as stated on Page 33 of the memorandum, have no intention of giving the Reparation Commission the authority to exact a revelation of secret of manufacture or other confidential information as to the exercise of executive power in German territory or interference in the direction or superintendence of German scholastic establishments. The treaty contains no stipulations giving such authority to the Reparation Commission.

"(9.) On Page 34 and following of the memorandum the allied and associated powers have not provided any special procedure to fix and cover the reparations exacted from Germany. The allied and associated powers have given Germany the possibility of presenting for the examination of the said powers documents and propositions at the signing of the treaty and within the four following months with a view to hastening the work on reparations, thus greatly shortening the investigation and accelerating the decisions.

"(10.) Concerning the facilities considered on Page 36 of the memorandum for the importation of food and raw materials into Germany, they are mentioned only 'under reserve of certain conditions, and within limits that cannot be indicated in advance, and also under reserve of the necessity in which the allied and associated powers find themselves of taking legitimate account of their own economic situation resulting from German aggression and from the war.'

"This cannot be considered as a promise to depart from the terms of the treaty, but the expression of the intention of the allied and associated powers to facilitate as far as possible the resumption of economic life in Germany.

"11. The memorandum provided that the Reparation Commission should be 'competent to grant to the Reichsbank, whenever it shall see fit, the right to export gold, in case it is a question of guarantees that this bank has furnished and which could not be furnished by any other means.'

"This assertion is in perfect accord with the stipulations inserted in the treaty, Article 248, according to which, up to May 1, 1921, the German Government shall be allowed neither to export gold nor to dispose of it, nor to permit gold to be exported or disposed of without the previous authorization of the allied and associated powers represented by the Reparation Commission.

"12. The allied and associated States, which on page 53 of the memorandum declared themselves ready to receive any information and proof that the German Government may be able to furnish on the subject of interested or fraudulent acts committed by persons charged with the liquidation of German property in the allied and associated States, will prosecute these persons in conformity with their own legislation, and, if necessary, will impose penalties in every way conforming to the provisions of their national law.

"Among the interpretations above given, those which, according to the allied and associated Powers may be considered as constituting an engagement, have been incorporated in the inclosed protocol, which the allied and associated Governments are disposed to annex to the treaty.

LENIN DENOUNCES BERNE SOCIALISTS

DEMANDS ONLY CLASS WAR

Without Liberty Except for the Proletariat—A Clear Statement of Bolshevist Theory.

A recent article contributed by Lenin, head of the Bolshevist dictatorship in Russia, to the Folkets Dagblat Politiken is translated in part by The New Europe to show to Socialists how far the Bolshevist theory is removed from their ideas and how the Bolshevist leader groups the Socialists with the bourgeois democracy his party is bent upon destroying. Lenin's article has an added interest in the recent attempts of the Bolsheviki to make concessions in return for recognition by the orderly Governments of the world. This article, which appeared in the Scandinavian paper on May 3, shows the doctrine of Lenin untainted by any opportunism, proclaiming the right of the proletariat to suppress all the usual liberties in order to gain power. The editor of The New Europe, R. W. Seton-Watson, a well-known British authority on Southeastern Europe and international politics, particularly commends this expression of the philosophy of Bolshevism to "all true Socialists and Democrats." Extracts from Lenin's article follow:

"The growth of the revolutionary movement among the proletariat of all countries has called forth strenuous efforts on the part of the bourgeois and their agents employed in workers' organizations, to find ideal political arguments in defense of the dominion of the extortioners. One argument in particular advocates the abolition of the dictatorship and the defense of democracy. The prevarication and hypocrisy of such an argument, repeated in a thousand ways by the capitalist press and at the conference held at Berne, February, 1919, must be obvious to all who will not be traitors to the doctrines of socialism.

"Above all, this argument acts on the ideas of the 'supreme democracy,' the 'supreme dictatorship,' without inquiring what class is referred to. Such argument being outside, or above, the standpoint of class, and put forward as the accepted standpoint of the whole nation in question, is a direct insult to the principles of socialism, namely, the doctrine of 'class war,' which, though recognized verbally, is forgotten in action by the Socialists who have gone over to the bourgeois camp. For in none of the capitalist countries does there exist a 'supreme democracy,' but only a bourgeois democracy.

"History teaches us that no oppressed class has ever yet come into power, or could do so, without going through a period of dictatorship—that is, the conquest of political power, and the forcible suppression of the most desperate, furious, and ruthless resistance always offered by the extortioners. The bourgeoisie, whose dominion is now championed by Socialists who are against the 'supreme dictatorship,' and throw themselves heart and soul into the breach for the 'supreme democracy,' have acquired power in civilized countries through a series of rebellions and civil wars, through a violent suppression of the monarchy, the feudal system, slave-owners, and through attempts at reform.

"By pointing out the class character of bourgeois civilization, bourgeois democracy and bourgeois parliamentarianism, all Socialists have put into words the idea expressed with the greatest scientific accuracy by Marx and Engels, that the democratic bourgeois republic was nothing but an apparatus for the oppression of the working class by the bourgeois class and of the working masses by a handful of capitalists. Among those who now uplift their voice against dictatorship and throw themselves in the breach for democracy, there is not a single revolutionary, nor a single Marxist, who has not solemnly sworn to the workmen that he recognized that fundamental truth of socialism. But now that a movement is started among the revolutionary proletariat with the object of doing away with this apparatus of oppression and introducing a dictatorship of the proletariat, these traitors to socialism represent the case as though the bourgeoisie desisted from opposition and were willing to yield to a workmen's majority and as though the democratic republic possessed no State apparatus for the oppression of labor by capital.

"The Paris commune, extolled by every one who wishes to be considered a Socialist, since they know it possesses the vast and genuine sympathy of the working classes, has very clearly proved the historic arbitrariness and the limited worth of bourgeois parliamentarianism and bourgeois democracy, which, as compared with the state of things in the Middle Ages, are very free institutions, but now, in these times of proletarian revolution, call for absolutely necessary and fundamental changes. * * * The commune was a nonparliamentary institution.

"The importance of the commune further consists in the effort to destroy and overthrow the bourgeois State machinery, the officials, courts of justice, military and police apparatus, and replace it by a self-administrative mass organization of workmen who could make no distinction between the law-giving and the executive powers. All bourgeois democratic republics of these days, among them also the German, which the treacherous Socialists falsely assert to be proletarian, retain this bourgeois State apparatus. This again is a clear and distinct proof that the call for the defense of the 'supreme democracy' is nothing but a defense of the bourgeois and its extortionist privileges.

"Liberty to hold meetings may be cited as an example of what is demanded by 'pure democracy.' Every responsible workman who has not broken away from his class understands at once that it would be quite wrong to give the extortionists liberty to hold meetings in this present situation, when they are resisting attempts to overthrow them, and defending their privileges. Neither in England in 1649, nor yet in France in 1793, did the bourgeois in its revolutionary phase grant liberty to hold meetings to the monarchists and aristocracy when the latter called foreign troops into the country, and met to organize an attempt at restoration. But when the bourgeois, having long since become reactionary, now demand of the proletariat guarantees in advance, that they, the extortioners, shall be free to hold meetings irrespective of what resistance the capitalists may offer against expropriation, the workmen simply laugh at such hypocrisy on the part of the bourgeois.

"Liberty of the press is also a much used catchword of 'pure democracy.' But the workmen know, and Socialists throughout every country have often confirmed it, that this liberty is a deception as long as the best printing offices and largest stocks of paper remain in the hands of the capitalists, and as long as capital retains its power over the press, a power which, throughout the world, is always more pronounced whenever democracy and the republican régime are most highly developed, as, for instance in America. * * * Real liberty and equality must be the order to be established by the communists, where there must be no possibility of profiting at another's expense, no possibility of either directly or indirectly giving the press into the power of the money makers, and where nothing will prevent the workmen (or a group of workmen) from owning and realizing equal rights in using the printing offices and stocks of paper belonging to the community.

"The history of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries showed us, already before the war, what is the true meaning of the renowned 'pure democracy' under capitalism. The Marxists have always maintained that the more developed and 'purer' democracy is the sharper and more unendurable becomes the fight between the classes, and the more evident becomes the pressure of capital and the dictatorship of the bourgeois. The Dreyfus affair in republican France, the sanguinary attacks on strikers by soldiers supplied with arms for the purpose from capitalistic sources that took place in the free and democratic Republic of America, these and thousands of similar facts reveal the truth which the bourgeois tries in vain to conceal, that even in the most democratic of republics the terrorism and dictatorship of the bourgeois reigns and shows itself quite openly each time the extortioners imagine that the power of capital is beginning to tremble.

"The imperialistic war of 1914-1918 has, once for all, revealed to the survivors among the workmen the true character of bourgeois democracy as bourgeois dictatorship in some of the most free republics. To enrich the German and English groups of millionaires, dozens of millions of men have been murdered and bourgeois military dictatorship established in the most free of the republics. This dictatorship is still kept up in the Entente countries even after the defeat of Germany. The war, more than anything else, has served to open the eyes of the workingman, has stripped bourgeois democracy of its sham adornment, and shown the nation the vast abyss of speculation and love of gain. The bourgeoisie carried on the war in the name of liberty and equality, and in that same name military contractors have raked in unheard-of riches. No effort on the part of the Bern Internationale will be able to conceal from the masses the thieving character, definitely unmasked, of bourgeois liberty, bourgeois equality, and bourgeois democracy."

RUMORS OVERWHELM BERLIN

Copyright, 1919, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, June 21, (via Copenhagen.)—Berlin is filled with rumors regarding the Weimar chaos, but, although the atmosphere is electric, it still remains very quiet outwardly. The streets are patrolled by military guards, and airplanes fly over the city; otherwise it wears its usual aspect.

The newspapers this morning reflect the confused situation at Weimar. The extreme Right and extreme Left are accusing each other of intended and even attempted coups to seize the Government.

The Freiheit reports an extraordinary conspiracy on the part of the militarists to overthrow the Government, seize power, and imprison all Independent and Communist leaders. Lettow-Vorbeck is mentioned as the head of this conspiracy. The General is at present with his troops on the eastern front, where, the Freiheit says, he is accumulating strong forces for a war against the Poles and the German Government, or whatever may call itself so.

These statements seem at least very much exaggerated. Lettow-Vorbeck does not possess the statesmanlike qualities necessary to become the leader of any such portentous movement—this being the judgment of his friends. If he is really involved, he is probably only a tool in the hands of certain well-known Junkers.

The militarists, on the other hand, accuse the Independents of having arranged a rising all over Germany, which is scheduled to break out at the beginning of next week. It is asserted that enormous quantities of arms have been silently smuggled from Hamburg and other northern centres to Berlin, from which they are to be further distributed.

There is just as little proof of these accusations as of those against the Lettow-Vorbeck. Nevertheless the various agencies hostile to the Independents show tremendous activity. Recently they managed to obtain a list of some 250 persons "sentenced to death by the Spartacides." The list contained the names of many well-known persons in Berlin.

A few days later the man who is said to have stolen the list disappeared mysteriously. It is believed that he was quietly "executed" by the Spartacides and his body thrown into a canal.

The Independents and Communists accuse the militarists of having done away with many of their stanchest followers in very much the same fashion.

WILSON TO DEPART QUICKLY.

Expected to Start for Home the Night the Treaty Is Signed.

LONDON, June 21.—Official reports received by the Peace Conference late this afternoon from Germany tended to indicate that the peace delegates would be here Monday at the prescribed hour, ready to sign the treaty.

The signing itself is expected at American headquarters to take place Wednesday. The French think it will take till Friday to go through the motions of getting the new German delegation properly accredited to Versailles.

President Wilson will leave Paris on his way to America on the day the treaty is signed.

GERMAN EXCHANGE RATE UP.

Austrian Rate Also Advances on Better Peace Prospects.

BERNE, June 22.—Owing to better peace prospects, the German rate of exchange has risen from about 34 to 40½ francs for 100 marks. The Austrian rate has risen from 15 to 20 francs per 100 crowns.

CITES THE KAISER FOR SINKING SHIPS

ston valves were open, the ships would not sink in less than five hours. The loss of the ships does not matter, but it is annoying that we were outwitted."

Commander Bellairs, M. P., declared that no watch from the guardboats could have prevented the scuttling of the ships, and that therefore the sailors on the spot are not to be blamed.

"The Admiralty is responsible," Commander Bellairs declared, "for they made the armistice, but did not think of the terms. The only lesson is that the first case of police work for the League of Nations has been unsuccessful, and that the German remains true to type."

Admiral Sir Percy Scott, interviewed by The Sunday Times, regards the sinking of the German ships as something to be expected.

"It serves us right," he said, "for trusting the Huns. They showed throughout the war that they were not a civilized race, and they never ought to have been treated as such; they are barbarians."

The Weekly Dispatch says that, according to an officer who visited the German fleet last month, the ships, when they arrived in Scapa Flow, were searched for explosives, but not stringently. The Admiralty officials made a hasty survey last November, but since then everybody, including British officers, have been kept away, because it was the opinion of the Government that the ships should not be treated as surrendered until the Peace Conference had decided their fate.

"The public will insist upon the disclosure of the blunderer, or blunderers, whose egregious trustfulness was so cynically abused," says The Weekly Dispatch in its editorial comment. "As the ships were in the custody of the British Navy, as trustee for the Allies, a most searching investigation into the nature of the precautions taken obviously is necessary."

TERMS ON POLAND MUCH CHANGED

PROVIDE FOR COMMISSION

Poland Is Required to Permit Exportation of Minerals to Germany for 15 Years.

ONLY 1 ARTICLE UNCHANGED

Orders Measures to Provide Adequate Payment for Property of German Nationals Liquidated.

By RICHARD V. OULAHAN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 22.—The most extensive changes in the revised Peace Treaty occur in Section 8, concerning Poland. As revised, the articles under Section 8 read as follows:

"Article 87—Germany, in conformity with that action already taken by the allied and associated powers, recognizes the complete independence of Poland, and renounces in her favor all rights and title over the territory bounded by the Baltic Sea, the eastern frontier of Germany, as laid down in Article 27 of Part II., [the boundaries of Germany,] of the present treaty, up to a point situated about two kilometers to the east of Lorzendorf, then a line to the acute angle which the northern boundary of Upper Silesia makes about three kilometers northwest of Simmenau, then to where the boundary of Upper Silesia has its meeting point with the old frontier between Germany and Russia, then this frontier to the point where it crosses the course of the Niemen, and then the northern frontier of East Prussia, as laid down in Article 28, Part II., aforesaid.

"The terms of this article do not, however, apply to the territories of East Prussia and the free city of Danzig, as defined in Article 28, of Part II., [the boundaries of Germany,] and in Article 100 of Section IX., [dealing with Danzig,]of this part.

[Article 88 in the original text of the treaty, providing for a committee of seven to fix the border between Germany and Poland, is affixed to Article 87 in the revised text.]

"ARTICLE 88.—In the portion of Upper Silesia included within the boundaries described below the inhabitants will be called upon to indicate by a vote whether they wish to be attached to Germany or to Poland:

"Starting from the northern point of the salient of the old province of Austrian Silesia, situated about eight kilometers east of Neustadt, the former frontier between Germany and Austria, to its junction with the boundary between the Kreise of Leobschuts and Ratibor;

"Thence in a northerly direction to a point about two kilometrs southeast of Katscher;

"The boundary between the Kreise of Leobschutz and Ratibor;

"Thence in a southeasterly direction to a point on the course of the Oder immediately south of the Ratibor-Oderberg Railway;

"A line to be fixed on the ground passing south of Karanowitz;

"Thence the old boundary between Germany and Austria, thence the old boundary between Germany and Russia to its junction with the administrative boundary between Posnania and Upper Silesia;

"Thence this administrative boundary to its junction with the administrative boundary between Upper and Middle Silesia;

"Thence westward to the point where the administrative boundary turns in an acute angle to the southwest about three kilometers northwest of Simmenau;

"The boundary between Upper and Middle Silesia;

"Thence in a westerly direction to a point to be fixed on the ground about two kilometers east of Orzendorf;

"A line to be fixed on the ground passing north of Kein Henneradorf;

"Thence southward to the point where the boundary between Upper and Middle Silesia cuts the Stadtel-Karlsruhe road;

"A line to be fixed on the grounds, passing west of Henneradorf, Polkowitz, Noldau, Steamersdorf and Dammer, and east of Strehlitz, Nassadel, Eckersdorf, Schwirz, and Stadtel;

"Thence the boundary between Upper and Middle Silesia to its junction with the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Falkenberg;

"Thence the eastern boundary of the Kreis of Falkenberg to the point of the salient which is three kilometers east of Puschine;

"Thence to the northern point of the salient of the old province of Austrian Silesia, situated about eight kilometers east of Neustadt;

"A line to be fixed on the ground, passing east of Zulls.

"The régime under which this plebiscite will be taken and given effect to is laid down in the annex hereto.

"The Polish and German Governments hereby respectively bind themselves to conduct no prosecutions on any part of their territory and to take no exceptional proceedings for any political action performed in Upper Silesia during the period of the régime laid down in the annex hereto, and up to the settlement of the final status of the country Germany hereby renounces in favor of Poland all rights and title over the portion of Upper Silesia lying beyond the frontier line fixed by the principal allies and associated powers as this result of the plebiscite.

ANNEX.

"1.—Within fifteen days from the coming into force of the present treaty the German troops and such officials as may be designated by the commission set up under the provisions of Paragraph 2 shall evacuate the plebiscite area. Up to the moment of the completion of the evacuation they shall refrain from any form of requisitioning in money or in kind and from all acts likely to prejudice the material interests of the country.

"Within the same period the workmen's and soldiers' councils which have been constituted in this area shall be dissolved. Members of such councils who are natives of another region and are exercising their functions at the date of the coming into force of the present treaty, or who have gone out of office since the 1st of March, 1919, shall be evacuated.

"All military and semi-military unions formed in the said area by the inhabitants of the district shall be immediately disbanded. All members of such military organizations who are not domiciled in the said area shall be required to leave it.

"2.—The plebiscite area shall be immediately placed under the authority of an international commission of four members to be designated by the following powers: The United States of America, France, the British Empire, and Italy. It shall be occupied by troops belonging to the allied and associated powers and the German Government undertakes to give facilities for the transference of troops to Upper Silesia.

"3.—The Commission shall enjoy all the powers exercised by the German or by the Prussian Government; except those of legislation or taxation. It shall also be substituted for the Government of the Province and the Regierungbezirk.

"It shall be within the competence of the Commission to interpret the powers hereby conferred upon it, and to determine to what extent it shall exercise them and to what extent they shall be left in the hands of the existing authorities.

"Changes in the existing laws and the existing taxation shall only be brought into force with the consent of the Commission.

"The Commission will maintain order with the help of the troops which will be at its disposal and to the extent which it may deem necessary by means of gendarmerie recruited among the inhabitants of the country. The Commission shall provide immediately for the replacement of the evacuated German officials, and, if occasion arises, shall itself order the evacuation of such authorites and proceed to the replacement of such local authorities as may be required. It shall take all steps which it thinks proper to insure the freedom, fairness, and secrecy of the vote. In particular, it shall have the right to order the expulsion of any person who may in any way have attempted to distort the result of the plebiscite by methods of corruption or intimidation.

"The Commission shall have full power to settle all questions arising from the execution of the present clauses. It shall be assisted by technical advisers, chosen by it from among the local populations. The decision of the Commission shall be taken by a majority vote.

"4.—The vote shall take place at such date as may be determined by the principal allied and associated powers, but not sooner than six months or later than eighteen months after the establishment of the Commission in the area.

"The right to vote shall be given to all persons, without distinction of sex, who:

"(A) Have completed their twentieth year on the first of January of the year in which the plebiscite takes place;

"(B) Were born in the plebiscite area or have been domiciled there since a date to be determined by the Commission, which shall not be subsequent to the first of January, 1919, or who have been expelled by the German authorities and have not retained their domicile there.

"Persons convicted of political offenses shall not exercise their right of voting. Every person will vote in the commune where he is domiciled, or in which he was born, if he has not retained his domicile in the area.

"The result of the vote will be determined by the communes according to the majority of votes in each commune.

"5. On the conclusion of the voting the number of votes cast in each commune will be communicated by the commission to the principal allied and associated powers with a full report as to the taking of the vote and a recommendation as to the line which ought to be adopted as the frontier of Germany in Upper Silesia. In this recommendation regard will be paid to the wishes of the inhabitants, as shown by the vote, and to the geographical and economic conditions of the locality.

"6. As soon as the frontier has been fixed by the principal allied and associated powers the German authorities will be notified by the International Commission that they are free to take over the administration of the territory which it is recognized should be German; the said authorities must proceed to do so within one month of such notification and in the manner prescribed by the commission. Within the same period and in the manner prescribed by the commission, the Polish Government must proceed to take over the administration of the territory which it is recognized should be Polish.

"When the administration of the territory has been provided for by the German and Polish authorities respectively the powers of the commission will terminate.

"The cost of the Army of Occupation and expenditure by the commission, whether in discharge of its own functions or in the administration of the territory, will be a charge on the area.

"Article 89.—Poland undertakes to accord freedom of transit to persons, goods, vessels, carriages, wagons, and mails in transit between East Prussia and the rest of Germany over Polish territory, including territorial waters, and to treat them at least as favorably as the persons, goods, vessels, carriages, wagons, and mails, respectively, of Polish or of any other most-favored nationality, origin, importation starting point, or ownership, as regards facilities, restrictions, and all other matters.

"Goods in transit shall be exempt from all customs or other similar duties.

"Freedom of transit will extend to telegraphic and telephonic services under the conditions laid down by the conventions referred to in Article 98.

"Article 90—Poland undertakes to permit, for a period of fifteen years, the exportation to Germany of the products of the mines in any part of Poland in accordance with the present treaty.

"Such export shall be subject to duties or other charges or restrictions on exportation.

"Poland agrees to take such steps as may be necessary to secure that such products shall be available for sale to purchasers in Germany on terms as favorable as are applicable to like products sold under similar conditions to purchasers in Poland or in any other country."

Article 91, revised, is the same as the original Article 90 and 91 combined, except as follows:

To the paragraph beginning "Persons who have exercised the above right to vote may," add the following at the end of the article: "In this portion of Upper Silesia submitted to a plebiscite the provisions of this article should only come into force as from the definite attribution of the territory."

Article 92 as revised is the same as the original Article 92 excepting for:

(1) In the paragraph beginning "In fixing under Article 258, etc." insert the words "of the present treaty" after the words "Article 256."

(2) Delete the last paragraph beginning "Further agreements will regulate, etc."

(3) Add to Article 92 the following paragraph:

"In all the German territory transferred in accordance with the present treaty and recognized as forming definitively a part of Poland, the property rights and interests of German nationals shall not be liquidated under Article 297 by the Polish Government except in accordance with the following provisions:

"First, the proceeds of the liquidation shall be paid direct to the owner;

"Second, if, on his application, the mixed arbitral tribunal provided for by the Section 6 of Part X. [Economic Clauses] of the present treaty, or an arbitrator appointed by that tribunal, is satisfied that the conditions of the sale or measures taken by the Polish Government outside of its general legislation were unfairly prejudicial to the price obtained, they shall have discretion to award to the owner equitable compensation to be paid by the Polish Government.

"Further agreement will regulate all questions arising out of the cession of the above territory, which are not regulated by the present treaty."

ITALIANS DISTURBED BY PARIS CRITICISM

BLAME THE PROPAGANDISTS

Say French Caused Italian Unfriendliness to President Wilson—London Chronicle Appeals for Italy.

PARIS, June 21, (Associated Press.)—The Italian delegation to the Peace Conference has been much disturbed by frequent suggestions in the French newspapers that German influences are affecting Italian politics and also by intimations that the Italians have supplied arms and ammunition to Bela Kun's Soviet Government in Hungary.

Members of the Italian delegation say the alleged French feeling against Italy is easily explained by the work of French propagandists, who are blamed by the Italians for the recent unfriendliness of the Italians to President Wilson and the United States. The delegation has been advised from Rome of the designation by King Victor Emmanuel of Signor Nitti to form a new Cabinet. Up to the present, however, the members of the delegation are without official information as to the actual selection of any members of the new Government.

Says Italy Was Treated Unfairly.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 21.—The Chronicle declares that the Italian Ministerial crisis is a grave matter for the Allies and says that there is no doubt but that Italy's treatment at the Peace Conference precipitated it.

After pointing out that Italy in many ways suffered the most of any among the five great powers represented at the conference and was not relieved of the shortage of food and coal which meant conditions of actual starving and shivering for the Italian masses, The Chronicle says that the spirits of the Italian people were borne up last winter by the assumption that the fruits of victory were assured to them by loyal and appreciative Allies, but that the events of the Spring have seemed to them cruel.

"They have seen their partners secure their principal aspirations," says The Chronicle, "but the corresponding interests of Italy remain unsecured—she has seen her Government publicly treated by President Wilson in a manner obviously derogatory to her position as a great power.

"One needs to ask one's self what would have happened to the Peace Conference if President Wilson's manifesto had been addressed either to France or to Great Britain in order to realize its significance in Italian eyes. Since then the Fiume question has dragged on, not because either Italy or Mr. Wilson was uncompromising, nor from any lack of friendly mediation in French and British quarters, but because Mr. Wilson was unwilling to overrule the total refusal to compromise, which is the attitude of the Jugoslavs.

"We do not believe there is serious danger of an Italian revolution. Hard pressed as the people are they have gained in political maturity and stability during recent years, and will not easily succumb to revolutionary temptation. But we should consider what the effect will be on the Italian mentality if they are left to face their trials without more practical sympathy from their associates in the war.

"We have to think not of the coming months only, but of the coming years, and to ask ourselves where the League of Nations will stand if it starts by alienating this young and active nation now more numerous than France, and only outnumbered on the Continent by the Germans and Russians.

"Is all the great work of Anglo-Franco-Italian consolidation, which the war achieved, to be thrown idly away on the war's morrow? We sincerely trust not, but if we are to escape that disaster some things must be done differently at Paris. There must be a different spirit from that which projected the new defensive triple alliance between France, Britain, and America, without even troubling to ask Italy whether she cared to adhere to it."

Says Britain Broke Secret Treaty.

ROME, June 21.—The Times points out in its issue of this afternoon that the details of the secret treaty of Saint Jean de Maurienne of August, 1917, between Italy and the Entente powers, has generally been forgotten because it was overshadowed by the Treaty of London, but that nevertheless it is most important in considering Italy's position.

"The treaty of Saint Jean de Maurienne," says the paper, "gave Smyrna to Italy, on condition that the agreement should be ratified by the Russian Government. A few months later Great Britain denounced the treaty on the pretext that Bolshevist Russia could never ratify it, but in reality Great Britain meanwhile had given Smyrna to Greece in exchange for aid promised by Premier Venizelos in the operations in Macedonia. Great Britain proposed that Italy take Anatolia, but Baron Sonnino [the Italian Foreign Minister] refused to make a new agreement."

ORLANDO BLAMED FOR CRISIS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, June 20.—After the fall of the Cabinet excited groups of Senators and Deputies gathered in the lobbies to discuss a probable successor to Orlando. His followers hoped he might be asked to form a new Ministry, being supported in this belief by the consideration that it would be most unwise to change now Italy's delegates to the Peace Conference at Paris. Even among Orlando's friends some believe he himself precipitated his fall, by being very tired and disgusted with the proceedings of the peace negotiations.

Since the tragic days of the sub-Alpine Parliament, when Italy was in the course of formation, nobody remembers a Ministerial crisis occurring in such grave conditions as the present one. Half a century ago, although the situation seemed more grave, as then little Piedmont was risking its very existence, there were such men as King Victor, Count Cavour, Garibaldi, not to speak of lesser ones, while Mazzini was abroad conspiring to reach the same object, although he often seemed in conflict with the leaders at home. Now the country is more mature, public opinion affirms itself more strongly, and the whole structure of Italy is healthier and more resistant, but lacks, it is felt here, the outstanding leaders of the past.

The Paris Peace Conference has been a great disappointment to Italy. Everybody here firmly believed their country was the favorite among the allied and associated powers. They argued, "Germany would have won the war from the very beginning without our neutrality, which allowed France to withdraw all her troops from the Italian frontier to concentrate them against the Germans. Then again Italy saved the situation when she entered the war at the very moment Russia was defeated. Finally, even after the disaster of Caporetto, if Italy had not with firm determination concentrated all her moral and material forces to resist on the Piave River, the entire Austrian Army would have joined the Germans in the great offensive on the French front, which would have had quite a different result."

Thus the Italians went to Paris thinking their claims would find no opposition. Instead, one of the ex-Ministers says, "We met a passionate opposition from America, although no American interest was involved in our Adriatic question, which is insignificant compared to the colossal question of the Far East, wherein Japan had its own way. Even little Greece, which at first refused to fight, even under pressure, and finally entered the war when the fight was practically over, despite any promise, will more than double her area and population, while Italy, with half a million dead, more than one million wounded, and about one hundred lire of debts, is refused a few square miles of territory which she claims only because of sentiment."

This is the atmosphere wherein the Ministerial crisis took place. All parties agree that, whatever men of whatever parties form the new Ministry, their imperative mandate must be to obtain, if not the annexation of Fiume, at least Italian control over that town. If this is obtained, the new Ministry, it is felt here, may be more ready to make concessions on other points, on condition that these should be proper guarantees to protect the Italian population which remains within the Jugoslav frontier.

GIOLITTI OPPONENTS FIGHT NITTI CABINET

Tittoni, Marconi and Scialoia to Compose New Italian Peace Delegation.

ROME, June 22.—The Italian delegation to the Peace Conference hereafter will be composed of former Foreign Minister Tittoni, Senator Guglielmo Marconi, and Senator Vittorio Scialoia.

The newspapers antagonistic to former Premier Giolitti are conducting a violent campaign against the formation of a Cabinet by Signor Nitti, calling him "Giolitti's lieutenant." The Giornale d'Italia and the Epocha are especially bitter in their articles, maintaining that no man having had the least connivance with neutralists or those ready to make renunciations in Italy's aspirations must be allowed to come into power at this critical moment.

Gabriel d'Annunzio, the poet, who champions this movement, has arrived in Rome and written a stirring article to the Italian Nation in the Popolo Italia, urging all true patriots to join in "thwarting the conspiracy."

The Giornale d'Italia says Signor Nitti notified d'Annunzio that he desired to see him on "neutral ground," wishing to explain his policy to d'Annunzio. The newspaper adds that d'Annunzio replied, declining to meet Nitti for a conversation on "neutral ground," for which he felt no necessity. He added, however, that he was always ready to receive Signor Nitti if he would come to his hotel. The Giornale d'Italia says that up to a late hour Saturday evening Signor Nitti had sent no reply.

DENIKIN DEFEATS FOUR RED ARMIES

In Three Weeks Cossack Commander Takes 22,000 Prisoners, with 150 Guns.

FIGHTING CLEAN CAMPAIGN

Bolshevist Troops Retreating from South Russia Destroy Towns as They Go.

By HAROLD WILLIAMS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

EKATERINODAR, Caucasus, June 5, (via London, June 22.)—General Denikin received me today. Throughout the whole revolution I have not seen another Russian leader who inspires such confidence at first sight. He is of medium height, thick set, with a close-clipped gray beard, bristling mustaches and a big, round forehead. In manner and speech he is directness and simplicity itself and a man of the people.

His rich, idiomatic Russian, with its slow, gentle intonations, is quite distinct from the language of the intelligentsia of the Russian aristocracy. His big, brown eyes light up suddenly under bushy eyebrows, with his kindly humorous smile, and give one the impression of a nature rich, generous brave, and absolutely straightforward.

This is the man who, after the Korniloff affair of 1917, was arrested by order of the Provisional Government in Berdicheff and brutally insulted and spat upon by hordes of demoralized soldiers who, with Alexieff and Korniloff, led that forlorn and desperate struggle in the steppes, and who, not very long ago, at the head of his troops advanced in pursuit of the Reds over a burning bridge at Torgovaya.

I heard it asserted in London that Denikin was a reactionary. No appellation could be more inept. He is a man, a patriot, and a soldier, moved by single-minded devotion to Russia. He is unversed in political affairs, but progressive in his ideas, and is fighting a hard and clean battle against the most treacherous and most unscrupulous enemy that ever devastated the territory and soul of a great nation.

We talked of many things, but I should like particularly to note the warm appreciation with which Denikin spoke of the present British policy toward Russia. Again and again he said it is so wise and so generous that it will not be forgotten for generations, and will have great effects in the world policy and the world markets.

Of the recent successes of his army he spoke without elation but with quiet satisfaction. He dwelt, too, on his recently announced agrarian and labor reforms, to which he evidently attached great importance.

The military position continues to improve daily. In three weeks the volunteer army has trebled its territory. Only three weeks ago guns could be heard at Novocherkask and Red patrols were within twenty miles of the town. Since then along the whole front from the Caspian to the Sea of Azov four Red armies have been thoroughly defeated and lost half their number and are still retreating. Denikin's forces captured 22,000 prisoners, 150 guns, 350 machine guns, 4 armored trains, and an immense quantity of other booty.

Along the Tsaritsin Railway General Wrangel's force of Kuban and Terek Cossacks and Kabardine cavalry have in nineteen days covered two-thirds of the distance from Torgovaya to Tsaritsin, and are now within seventy miles of that important Volga town, driving before them the routed and demoralised enemy.

In the Don territory the energetic northward push of the Don Cossacks will very soon entirely have freed the Don from the Red forces.

Almost more remarkable is the rapid westward movement into the Ekaterinoslav Government, where, largely through the action of tanks and the daring raids of General Shkuro's horsemen, the Donetz Basin has been conquered, and the Reds are retiring with such speed that if continued it would threaten the early fall of Kharkoff and Ekaterinoslav.

The front now has the oddest configuration and presents the appearance of a clumsily sprawling camel with its fore feet on the Caspian, north of Petrovsk, with its knees far up in the waterless Kalmyk steppes, southwest of Tsaritsin, with its head high up in the northern Don territory, and with its neck running along north of Lugansk and Bakhmut. Then the front suddenly turns due south and touches the Sea of Azov near Berdiansk.

Such a front would be impossible under the conditions of trench warfare, but this is a very novel kind of open warfare, with a combination of regular and guerrilla tactics, which gives great scope to personal courage and initiative.

Moreover, the topographical conditions are very greatly different on parts of the front. In the Tsaritsin direction war is waged in the dreary steppes haunted by nomads, whose camels gaze in dull perplexity at the charges of General Ulgain's cavalry. In the west the wave of battle rolls through thickly populated industrial and mining districts, where the sudden capture of railway junctions is of vital importance. Two more such important junctions, Slaviansk and Yama, have just been seized by the victorious volunteer army.

This time during their retreat the Bolsheviki are destroying with a systematic ruthlessness that suggests German inspiration. They have made a pretty thorough effort to wreck Mariupol Port, and are blowing up bridges, destroying railway points, and hastily sending northward rolling stock.

REDS KILL FIRST AMERICAN IN SIBERIA

Two Comrades of Chicago Soldier Captured, One Released, by Bolsheviki.

VLADIVOSTOK, June 19, (Associated Press.)—Walter Kellerman of Chicago was killed, and C. H. Batchelor of Kansas City, and Chester Burt of Antigo, Wisconsin, were captured in a fight between twenty-five United States troops and 200 Bolsheviki on June 12, 100 miles to the north of Vladivostok.

Burt later was released, being given a note saying that Batchelor would be freed only upon the release of all Bolshevist prisoners. Burt said Batchelor was being well treated.

News of the first death in action of an American in Siberia was received at headquarters June 13, but a few hours later communication with American detachments was broken when the Bolsheviki attacked the Japanese sector at Nikolsk and Spasksie, where the rails of the railway were loosened and the wires cut.

Communication was re-established June 18, but there have been no reports from the Americans, except news brought by a Japanese courier that the Japanese and American troops were making a determined effort to prevent the Bolsheviki from destroying the railroad.

Kellerman met his death on the skirmish line, while Burt and Batchelor were captured while making a position map. In addition one American was wounded. The Bolsheviki lost eight killed and four prisoners.

In another fight at Uspanka Village, June 11, four Americans were wounded and one Bolshevik was killed and two were wounded and four made prisoners.

Transportation is demoralized between Nikolsk and Khabarovsk, where railroad wrecks are frequent. The Bolsheviki are stopping trains and firing on the cars. On June 11, near Spasksie, a train, including American hospital cars, with surgeons, was fired on for two hours. The Japanese finally relieved the situation.

On the 13th, in the American sector, the Bolsheviki attacked a train. Three civilians were killed and eighteen others, including women and children, were wounded.

The small American force is experiencing difficulties in its work of protecting the railway, upon which the Bolsheviki are able to dash at unprotected spots, remove the rails, and cut the telegraph lines and make their escape. American patrols frequently surprise the Bolsheviki and offer battle, but the Reds usually run away without fighting. They vanish into the villages and hide their arms and pretend to be peaceful peasants.

ASK GERMANY TO GET OUT.

Allies Request Evacuation of Esthonia and Other Occupied Territory.

BERLIN, June 22.—It is officially confirmed that General Nudant, Marshal Foch's representative on the Allied Armistice Commission, has presented to the German Armistice Commission a request of the allied and associated powers that Germany take immediate steps to stop the German advance in Esthonia.

The immediate evacuation of Windau and Libau is requested, and the hastening of the evacuation of territory formerly belonging to Russia is asked for.

SENATORS EXPECT GERMANS TO SIGN

Look for No Delay as Result of Treaty Reservations Made by Their Assembly.

DISPLAY LITTLE INTEREST

Those in Washington Sunday More Concerned Over Republican Policy on League.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The expectation in inner circles here is that the treaty will be signed on Thursday, June 26.

The fact that the action of the German Assembly in agreeing to sign was subject to reservation as to responsibility for the war and the punishment of the Kaiser was not generally regarded here as calculated to cause delay. The refusal of the allied leaders to assent to the reservations is held to leave the Germans no alternative but to sign.

Very little comment on the situation was obtainable from Senators tonight. Many had gone away for the week-end and those in the city, mostly Republicans engaged in conferences over the suggestion of Elihu Root concerning the League of Nations, were in no frame of mind to discuss it. Senator Borah of Idaho was one of these. Democratic Senators generally felt that there was very little left to be said.

Senator Hitchcock, former Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was not willing to comment at length on the news.

"Assuming that the information conveyed in the press dispatch is true," he said, "I don't see that I can say anything more than that I believe that settles it. The reservations given appear rather sentimental ones. If they are acceptable to the associated Governments it means the signing of the treaty and the restoration of peace. Should the associated Governments not be willing to acquiesce, it would mean that the Germans would ultimately sign anyhow. The signing of the treaty will mark the opening of a new era in the annals of the world, the beginning of the greatest epoch in its history."

Senator Poindexter of Washington, Republican, said:

"I hope that the reported acceptance of the terms by the German Assembly has been such as to bring the entire matter to a full conclusion, so that the President may be enabled to come back soon from Europe and so that the army may soon be brought back to this country. In my judgment, the terms were not strong or harsh enough, not so severe as they should have been. The difficulty of enforcing them has been intensified, I think, by the long delay of seven months of controversy over their application. But that has passed now, the terms have been agreed upon by the Peace Conference, and Germany should accept them. If Germany has decided to accept the terms I am glad to hear it.

"As to the reservations reported to have been made by the German Assembly, it is not made plain whether that body, in agreeing to accept, has merely voiced its opinion on the question, of responsibility and on whether the Kaiser should be tried, or whether Germany in signing will make these reservations. If that is the intention, then the Allies could make a counter-declaration in signing, and the two points involved in the reservations could be left for later adjudication. It makes little difference what Germany says regarding her responsibility for the war. The matter of the punishment of the Kaiser, however, is a more important question, and the reservation on that point depends on how it is framed."

One prominent Republican Senator declined to comment on the action of the German Assembly for quotation, but said with the understanding that his name be not used:

"I do not care what the Germans say regarding responsibility for the war. Personally, I have always thought the trial of the Kaiser would be a piece of ridiculous nonsense and the German people cowards to assent to it. I do not know the form in which the reservations are made, but believe the Allies will yield on them with a possible counter-declaration on the question of responsibility for the war."

GERMANS CAN GET OUR FOOD

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, June 21.—THE NEW YORK TIMES learned that the temporary embargo on the export of foodstuffs to Germany does not apply to the export of American foodstuffs from Holland.

Holland refuses to export certain Dutch foodstuffs unless Germany consents to buy the surplus Dutch salted market produce, as during the war Holland greatly increased the production of vegetables for Germany and it is now difficult to dispose of the surplus.

The question of a possible renewal of the blockade has been agitating the Dutch. The Handelsblad states that the Dutch were never asked to co-operate with the associated powers, but that the Netherlands was asked to enforce absolute prohibition of exports and imports if Germany refused to sign the Peace Treaty.

"This would be the application of one of the levers of the League, and consent to this demand would be tantamount to a declaration of war on Germany."

ABANDON FIGHT FOR KNOX RESOLUTION

garded as likely that such a measure will be before the Senate before the week is over.

Already the Senate has before it a resolution of Senator Spencer, Republican, of Missouri, which does not go so far as the Root plan. Under Mr. Spencer's resolution, which has commanded favorable comment among antagonists of the League of Nations covenant, explicit reservations are demanded on the subjects of the Monroe Doctrine, adjudication by the United States of purely domestic questions, and an unequivocal determination that the United States through Congress shall have the exclusive right to determine if it is to send armies abroad to participate in wars that might be provoked through the guarantee, under Article X., of the integrity of weaker nations.

Effect of Qualification.

Mr. Root's qualifying resolution, Senators pointed out today, would eliminate Article X. from the League covenant. In this respect it would go much further than any other scheme yet proposed as to a resolution of reservation. Some Senators argued that, under Mr. Root's proposal, Article X. might be thrown back to the Peace Conference, along with the entire treaty, on the ground that it would constitute an amendment of the body of the treaty. They do not want the Peace Conference so have to pass again upon the treaty because of the long delay that would inevitably ensue in reconsidering it.

Radical opponents of the League of Nations covenant, refrained today from committing themselves on the Root proposal. It developed that Senator Borah of Idaho, and Senator Johnson of California, among the radicals, together with Senator Fall of New Mexico, Senator McCormick of Illinois, Senator Kenyon of Iowa, and Senator Norris of Nebraska, are to confer over a policy to pursue with respect to the suggestions of Mr. Root.

These Senators believe, it was stated, that a qualifying resolution would throw any of the matters placed under reservation, no matter of what character, to the League of Nations Council for determination, should an issue come up involving them. This, they feel, would have the effect of the United States merely declaring itself in a qualifying resolution that would be adjudicated by the League Council. In other words, a qualifying resolution would be futile.

Senator Borah holds the view that no qualifying resolution would serve the purpose of safeguarding the rights of the United States as to the Monroe Doctrine, immigration, tariff or any other question involving purely domestic matters. He, with other League opponents, has insisted all along that direct amendment of the League of Nations covenant is necessary if the object sought is to be achieved.

Differences of Opinion.

Mr. Root argued in his letter to Mr. Lodge that the qualifying resolution he suggested would not, in effect, refer the matters under reservation to the League Council. On that point there appears to be a measure of contention that will have to be smoothed out before the Root plan can muster support of the various factions fighting the League covenant. Senator Lodge is said to be confident that, after the treaty of peace is before the Senate and the League covenant is under debate, the opposition to the covenant will be able to concentrate its force upon a resolution framed along the lines of that projected by Mr. Root.

As to the chance of the opposition commanding sufficient votes to put through a qualifying resolution of that nature, much doubt is expressed. While all the opponents of the League covenant favor amendments, chiefly as to Article X., not a few of them are expected to fall into line and vote for the covenant, as a part of the treaty, rather than have the treaty put in jeopardy.

Senator Hitchcock, ranking Democratic member of the Foreign Relations Committee, characterised the Root plan as "skilfully drawn." Its apparent effect, he said, would be to amend the League of Nations covenant. He wanted time to study it before committing himself as to its scope.

"From my reading of it—and I have read it twice," said Mr. Hitchcock, "I am inclined to think that it means nothing less than the amendment of the League covenant. He seeks the elimination of Article X., and, if that is done, whether through a qualifying resolution or through direct amendment, it would mean that the entire treaty would have to go back to the Peace Conference for reconsideration.

"Mr. Root's suggested qualifying resolution is garbed as a measure intended to reserve certain matters for adjudication by the United States. But it seems to go much further than that in striking out clauses, notably Article X. It is only another method of attack upon the League of Nations. I am quite confident—in fact, I could go further and say I know—that the Senate will not adopt any qualifying resolution. Not enough Senators can be found to support one. I stand, as I have all along, upon the conviction that the League of Nations covenant will be adopted by the Senate, without amendment."

Senator Hitchcock pointed out that it would require a majority vote to adopt any qualifying resolution. With the narrow margin of two votes in the Republican working majority, and with at least six Republican Senators counted upon as voting for the League of Nations covenant without amendment, the Nebraskan calculated that the fight for changes in the covenant would be of no avail.

New Hopeful of Success.

Senator New of Indiana, Republican member of the Foreign Relations Committee, disputed Mr. Hitchcock's assertion that the League of Nations covenant could not be amended through a qualifying resolution.

"The fight will go on," said Mr. New. "I favor the resolution suggested by Mr. Root, and I am not at all disposed to agree that it cannot be put through. I would like to see the Knox resolution adopted, so that the Senate could proceed cautiously in considering the League of Nations covenant. If the Senate does not adopt it, then we shall have to have recourse to direct amendments to the covenant or qualifying resolutions embracing the points of objection."

Mr. New inclines toward a qualifying resolution, rather than direct amendment of the League covenant, as the logical course to pursue. He believes, he said, that a resolution such as that outlined by Mr. Root would take the matters put under reservation entirely out of the hands of the League Council.

Senator Spencer said the country had been waiting to hear what Mr. Root had to say regarding the League of Nations covenant, and that his opinion, as expressed in his letter to Senator Lodge, would undoubtedly carry great weight.

"I think Mr. Root magnifies some of the difficulties," said Mr. Spencer. "I do not agree that Article X. must be entirely eliminated from the body of the covenant through a qualifying resolution or direct amendment. I believe that the United States can express its dissent from Article X., as well as other features, in a resolution that will not violate the entire covenant. The United States could merely stipulate that it would not be bound by any such clauses as it may object to and leave the covenant intact. That is the purpose of my own resolution.

"I do not favor putting through a resolution that would tie up the entire convenant. I merely want to see the position of the United States as to the Monroe Doctrine safeguarded, and its right to settle matters relating to immigration, tariff, and other domestic questions explicitly defined. I also want a clear stipulation that the United States reserves the right through Congress to send its soldiers where it sees fit; that alone would save the United States from becoming involved in little wars over territorial disputes, under Article X.

"I regard Mr. Root's proposed resolution as going too far. However, I repeat that it deserves close study, and it will be assured of that if it is offered in the Senate."

Mr. Spencer believed, he said, that the Senate "would go slow" about rejecting the League covenant. He felt that some way would be found to register the dissent of the ratifying body as to its objectionable features, as viewed by its opponents.

FLAYS TREATY OPPONENTS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 22.—Republican Senators opposing the treaty of peace were scored today by Senator David Walsh of Massachusetts, who addressed the New Haven Democratic Club.

"If it were not for the fact that partisanship is so intense in America," he said, "these Senators would be branded as traitors. Perhaps some excuse may be offered by them for this act because President Wilson is the enemy of organized greed in this country. I wish to say, however, that the Democrat who deserts his party at this time is like the soldier in the trenches who turns his back to the enemy when it leads an attack on him.

"President Wilson has commanded the admiration of Europe by his handling of the peace situation. He has been attacked in Congress for going abroad, but he has influenced the history of the world by the trip he has taken. He is entitled to the support of his countrymen for his record as an American."

To Advocate League of Nations.

An executive committee of 100, to advocate the League of Nations, has been organized in Queens County with Richard S. Newcombe, Chairman; Miss Eliza Macdonald, Vice Chairman, and Mrs. Joseph A. Sinclair, Secretary. Mason O. Smedley will be Chairman of the Democratic organization, and Anthony Moore will head the Republican organization which will assist in the work. The committee hopes to obtain the signatures of thousands of voters to petitions which will be forwarded to Senators Wadsworth and Calder asking them to support the League.

ASSERTS DE VALERA SEEKS IRISH LOAN

LEADER STILL IN HIDING

Friends of Irish Freedom Meet to Complete Arrangements for Reception Today.

The chief objects of the visit of Eamonn de Valera, former professor of mathematics in Dublin colleges and now "President of the Sinn Fein Republic of Ireland," as explained yesterday at the Waldorf-Astoria by his advance emissary, Harry J. Boland, Sinn Fein member of Parliament for South Roscommon, will be "to get in touch with official America," and float a bond issue of the Irish Republic.

As for de Valera himself, he will emerge today from the shadows and silences that have enshrouded him since he came into America somehow, sometime, and at 5:30 o'clock, "on the dot," will step into the Presidential suite at the Waldorf to greet his friends and tell the world the prospects for Irish freedom, according to Boland.

In expectation of the coming of the Irish leader, a meeting was held last night, in the Astor Gallery of the hotel by the Friends of Irish Freedom for the purpose of making final arrangements for his reception. The report that steps might be taken to deport de Valera and Boland were laughed at, since he is a native-born American, his friends asserted.

All day yesterday, the Irish President remained hidden and there was no abatement of the mystery that surrounded his whereabouts. In fact, the secret became a greater secret, since even Boland professed yesterday that he didn't know where his chief was. The member of Parliament for South Roscommon did, however, express his belief that de Valera wasn't "in New York, or Philadelphia, or three miles or five miles from here—the Waldorf." He said "the President" wished to remain in seclusion until he had finished a statement which he was to issue tomorrow night.

Comes as Ireland's Envoy.

When Boland appeared at the hotel he was accompanied by several friends and a Miss Martin, who is connected with the Friends of Irish Freedom, 280 Broadway. Boland is of medium height, powerfully built, and rather soft-spoken except when Great Britain and a free Ireland are mentioned. Then his broad, thick hands close, his chin is thrust forward, and he isn't soft-spoken at all.

"Eamonn de Valera, President of the Irish Republic," he said yesterday, "is in his native city. He is here as the direct representative of the people of Ireland, to the people of America. He is the elected President of the elected Government of the Irish Nation, which has deliberately determined itself as a republic. He was chosen by adult suffrage, through the peaceful, democratic machinery of the ballot. Nominated by no small group of special interest, nor yet self-appointed, de Valera was freely chosen by a three to one majority of the Irish people, as the duly accredited spokesman of the Irish Nation. He is, therefore, entitled to speak for Ireland with an authority, from the standpoint of democracy, equal to that of the President of the United States or of the Premier of France or of Great Britain.

"President de Valera has undertaken this journey at the request of his Government. His presence is intended to mark, in a conspicuous manner, the esteem in which the Irish people hold the people of America. His personal connection with this country, coupled with his well-known affection for it, in addition to his qualifications as a statesman, make him a suitable Ambassador.

"The visit of the President of the Irish Republic to America at this time is fraught with grave importance. He comes with a plan of reconstruction for Ireland, and will endeavor to interest American industries in the broad field of Irish commerce. He will float in America a bond issue of the Irish Republic that will start that new republic on a financial plane equaled by few and excelled by none. He will appeal to official America to stand by the Irish Republic and recognize it before the world."

Boland then traced the career of de Valera from the date of his birth, in New York, Oct. 14, 1882, to the present. He related how de Valera, under Commander in Chief Padriac Pearse, had revolted with the Irish Volunteers during Easter week, 1916, and had been tried and sentenced to be shot. His life was spared, however, because he was an American.

Looks for America's Support.

"The Clare election," he continued, "proved what Irishmen have ever contended—that the aspirations of the people of Ireland were for the restoration of their sovereign independence. They had heard the splendid principles enunciated by President Wilson, and they seized upon the entry of America into the war to stake their claims as a separate nation. They hailed with joy the words of President Wilson for 'full, unrammeled self-determination for all peoples, great and small.' They read with delight the speech of the President of the United States wherein he asked, 'Were peoples to be bartered from sovereignty to sovereignty by military power?' and, having full confidence in the American people, knowing the justice of her claim, Ireland looked to this new leader to consummate the struggle of seven centuries in a glorious freedom."

After referring to the fact that the Sinn Fein now holds seventy-three Irish seats in Parliament, Boland spoke of the much-mooted escape of de Valera from Lincolnshire prison last February.

"President de Valera himself was confined in Lincoln prison," he said, "and visitors were not permitted, correspondence was heavily censored, yet he managed to keep in touch with leaders in Ireland. He saw the peace conference at work, and felt that some effort must be made to present Ireland's claims before that body. He planned the escape and sent word of his plans to his colleagues at home. Two men were sent to aid him in his escape, and the wide world knows how well it succeeded. As one of the men who aided the escape from the outside, I wish to emphatically deny the statements that have appeared so many times in the American papers to the effect that two Irish girls were employed to cajole the soldiers from their posts. We respect our Irish girls too highly to submit them to the tender mercies of British soldiers. The escape was work for men and was accomplished by men.

"President de Valera, having completed his work in Ireland, decided with the approval of his Cabinet, to come to America, to plead the cause of Ireland before this great Republic. He had unbounded confidence in the American people, and he feels certain that America will insist upon her war aims being enforced, and he knows that America will not permit the people of Ireland to be the only white people in Europe, or in the world, condemned to slavery."

Mr. Boland added that when he and the President arrived in Washington, probably at the end of this week, they intended to "interview the Senators and Congressmen." Three great heaps of telegrams, certainly 1,000 of them, arrived at the Waldorf yesterday addressed to the President. The messages were congratulatory, and came from all parts of the country. In addition, there were a couple of sacks of mail, principally from this city and nearby points.

MOTHER REMAINS SILENT.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 22.—Mrs. Catherine T. Wheelwright, mother of the so-called President of the Irish Sinn Fein Republic, declared tonight that until her son had issued his statement to the American people she would refuse to say anything about her son or his ambitions. She tacitly admitted that Professor de Valera would soon be in New York, and that as soon as he reached headquarters there he would speak to the American people.

Although it is now known that Harry J. Boland, secretary to de Valera, was a guest at the Wheelwright home in Brighton Street more than a week ago, the white-haired Irish woman was firm in her resolution not to talk. Neighbors declare that they were introduced to Boland by Charles B. Wheelwright, her husband, who also admitted that Boland had brought a message from de Valera to his mother.

WALSH AND DUNNE ASK ABOUT IRELAND

Copyright, 1919, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

PARIS, June 22.—The American Commission for Irish Independence, now in Paris, has addressed the following letter to the American Commission to Negotiate Peace:

"Gentlemen: We beg to advise you the American Federation of Labor, at its national annual session, being held in Atlantic City, by unanimous vote adopted a resolution urging international recognition of the republican form of government now existing in Ireland and urging the Peace Conference to give a hearing to President De Valera, Arthur Griffith, and Count George Noble Plunkett on the case of Ireland. May we point out some reasons which we respectfully submit should move your honorable body to make every effort to have this resolution complied with:

"First—The American Federation of Labor has enrolled in its membership more than 3,000,000 men and women, with a sphere of legitimate influence embracing many millions more.

"Second—The American Federation of Labor contributed a high percentage to the American Expeditionary Forces.

"Third—The organization was the basis and strong bulwark of the division of industry behind the military forces of the United States, without which the war could not have been won.

"Fourth—Mainly through the efforts of this great organization, its veteran leader and other officials, the productivity of our country during the great world war was maintained at its highest point and not one day's delay occasioned in the production of essential war materials by strikes or labor disputes.

"Fifth—The American Federation of Labor, aside from its purely industrial activities, is, we believe, without exaggeration, the most powerful force existent in the world today for the maintenance of the democracy cherished and practiced by us and for the universal establishment of which America entered the world war, and to which the world must look for safety amid class-conflicting governmental ideas, ranging from reactionary ambitions of monarchies and autocracies to the extreme dangers of unrestraint and chaos.

"We also take this occasion to point out, since we made our original request to your honorable body on behalf of the Irish race, that America is urging you to try to secure a hearing for the Irish case before the Peace Conference, and the United States Senate with practical unanimity has made the same request. We have transmitted to you from bodies representing a vast number of American citizens of all shades of political belief, composing all the groups which are makers of the national life, cablegrams to the same effect.

"In view of the fact that the day is so close at hand upon which we all earnestly hope the terms of peace will be signed, with greatest respect, but with all urgency, we would ask the favor of a reply to the following questions:

"A—Has the American Commission to negotiate peace or any individual member thereof made a request to the general Peace Conference for a hearing for Messrs. de Valera, Griffith, and Plunkett?

"B—Has your honorable body or any individual member thereof made a request to the Peace Conference for international recognition of the Irish Republic?

"C—Has your honorable body or any individual member thereof made a request to the Peace Conference for any person or persons to present the case of Ireland and of its right of self-determination to the Peace Conference?

"D—If all or any such requests have been made, have same been considered by the Peace Conference? If so, has the answer thereto been received from the Peace Conference or any official representative thereof?

"E—If such requests have not been made, will your honorable body be good enough, in view of the manifold petitions and appeals herein referred to and in the cause of humanity and justice, make such requests or any thereof which you may deem proper; and if so, promptly advise us as to the result or make the same public, so that all your petitioners may be advised?"

The petition is signed by Frank P. Walsh and Edward F. Dunne.

The Irish Commissioners sent another letter to the American delegates reading:

"We might refrain from making a reply to the answer of Minister Ian McPherson, Chief Secretary for Ireland, for these reasons:

"1. Our charges were not directed against subordinate officials of the English Government in Ireland, but against the Government of his Majesty King George V.

"2. That the reply of Mr. McPherson completely dodges the demand for an impartial commission of investigation and is plainly an undignified effort on the part of the English Government to try the Irish atrocity charges in friendly newspapers instead of before an impartial tribunal.

"3. That it took nearly two weeks to frame a reply, when any first-class Government with an orderly departmental record could have submitted an honest, truthful one within two hours.

"4. That reply, as characterized by The London Times, is halting, stammering, evasive.

"5. On account of damaging, shameful admissions of misgovernment and violation of human rights contained in the reply itself.

"6. The reply seeks to wage a campaign of slander and abuse against the investigators who preferred the charges."

The letter goes on to state that the American Commission for Ireland will prove all its charges, if an impartial court of inquiry is established.

"Unless the Government of Great Britain quickly agrees to the institution of an impartial inquiry by the Peace Conference, then its hypocritical pretension that it has defended the small, weak nations will be exposed to the world in its nakedness," the letter says in closing.

WIN FRENCH WAR CROSS.

Lieuts. Butterfield and Fox and Major Fish Decorated.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Three more American Red Cross workers, members of the ambulance section in France, have been decorated with the Croix de Guerre for bravery under fire, according to a cable message received today at Red Cross Headquarters. They are Lieutenant Jack Butterfield of Evanston, Ill.; Lieutenant W. J. Fox of Buffalo, and Major E. A. Fish of Minneapolis.

Butterfield and Fox were wounded, the former severely. After a fragment of shell lodged near his spine Butterfield, with his left leg paralyzed, dragged himself to an ambulance, cranked it, and drove the car to its destination.

British Committee of Inquiry Has So Reported to Government, ex-Food Controller Says.

TALKS OF ALLIED ACTION

Can Be Made to Take Effective Form Even Without United States, Mr. Clynes Holds.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 22.—J. R. Clynes, Labor M. P. for Manchester, who was Food Controller in 1917 and 1918, publishes an article in The Daily News on the new food situation and the menace of trusts in causing advances in prices. He says:

"Fifteen months ago the Government created a committee to inquire into the doings of trusts in relation to many articles besides food. The committee has just reported. It finds there is in every important branch of industry in the United Kingdom 'an increased tendency to the formation of combinations and associations in trade having for their purpose the restriction of competition and control of prices.'

"This committee, reporting in relation to the American meat trust, states that 'the menace of this concentrated control of the nation's food is increased by the fact that five corporations and their 500 and odd subsidiary controlled and affiliated companies are bound together by joint ownership agreements, understandings, communities of interest, and family relationships.'

"Mr. McCurdy, M. P., Chairman of the committee, speaking recently as Parliamentary Secretary to the Food Ministry and referring to his discoveries on the committee, told us of the extraordinary way in which, during the war, the growth of trusts and trade combinations, which was extending at a rapid rate before the war, had been accelerated.

"'I realized,' he says, 'what a real menace to the interests of consumers and producers alike in all parts of the world were the operations of such syndicates as that which practically controls the production, distribution, and sale of meat and of food products in the United States—that great trust which is known as the Big Five.'

"Now, this question was urgent fifteen months ago, but the Food Ministry than was better able to deal with it; for the reason that we purchased our food jointly with the Allies for the common purpose of prosecuting the war and we purchased at prices which gave to American sellers no better profit than they might derive on sales of foodstuffs to the American Government for the feeding of the American Army and Navy.

"The situation is changed. Interallied purchase has ceased and the Food Controller has recently told us that it has been abandoned because of the desire of America to return to a free and uncontrolled market. That may be a good thing for America as a seller of food. It will give joy to the exporter and speculator. But it will be a sad thing for the buyers, especially after peace is signed hungry buyers in so many parts of Europe are driven to compete with us in the purchase of food and by their competition send up the price which formerly was kept down because we bought in co-operation.

"The Government as yet has shown no inclination to act upon the recommendations of its committee, but the decision of America ought not to leave us helpless, and action is imperative. Some effective form of interallied action is not impossible, even if it cannot be continued with American participation. For so long as any state of scarcity exists both control and co-operation will be required in the consumers' interests."

VIENNA EXPECTS OCCUPATION BY ALLIES

Hungarian Communists Threatening Frontier and British and French May Intervene.

LONDON, June 22.—Special dispatches received from Vienna contain reports suggesting the approaching occupation of Vienna by Italian and French troops owing to the threatening attitude of the Hungarian communists on the frontier.

VIENNA, June 21, (Associated Press.) The Soviet forces are reported to be renewing their attempts against Pressburg.

The railway men who struck for higher wages in March made a demand today for more money. President Seitz replied that if more relief allowances were paid there would be no money left. He said the factories were being socialized and that 2,000,000,000 crowns had been paid for relief to soldiers and workmen during the past eight months. He promised, however, an increased payment in the August allowances.

The Communists say the Rothschilds and other wealthy families are guaranteeing pensions to the Volkswehr, and that when the rich spend money in such ways communism is bound to result.

Race Plea to Paris Council Recites Terms to Enemy Minorities.

PARIS, June 22.—William Trotter of Boston, Secretary of the Race Petitioners to the Peace Conference, having been refused an audience by President Wilson, has written an open letter to the Supreme Council of the five great powers detailing six cases where negro men are alleged to have been "victims" of undemocratic class distinction.

The petition says that, now that the war fought to democratize the world has been won, and colored men have done their share in winning it, they should receive such equal rights as will be granted to ethnical minorities in Austria.

BARUCH SAYS LABOR MUST HAVE NEW DEAL

Urges That Share in Ownership and Management Be Given to Workers.

BY CHARLES E. GRASTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 20.—Bernard Baruch, just back from Belgium, told me today that the working people of Germany were little concerned regarding the peace treaty details. They wanted peace, and they wanted it immediately.

"There is but one program for Germany and the rest of the world—work, save, pay," Mr. Baruch went on. "Many misguided people have been trying to find some way to beat the game. It can't be done. There is no short cut to the solution of the problem that now confronts the whole world. We have all got to wake up to the fact that we are never going to have back the world that existed in 1914.

"First and foremost, we have got to wake up to the new terms on which labor must be treated. Labor never again will be satisfied with the old conditions. A proprietary share in what he produces must be given to the working man, and he has got to be taken into the management of the corporations by which he is employed. The workingman must sit on the Boards of Directors. These conditions are here, and must be promptly recognized. Capital, instead of hanging back and passively resisting, should rush to meet the advancing conditions, or else labor may not be satisfied merely with what it is entitled to, and may demand more than its share."

MERCIER SAYS WORK IS BELGIUM'S NEED

BRUSSELS, June 21, (Associated Press.)—Cardinal Mercier, in granting a special audience at Malines to Frederick L. Collins, an American publisher, authorized the publication of the following statement apropos President Wilson's visit to Belgium:

"America will be rendering an invaluable service to Belgium in the early fulfillment of President Wilson's promises of practical assistance in the way of raw materials, machinery, and credit. In the little city of Malines we have 30,000 workers, most of whom are involuntarily idle because they have no material or machinery.

"Since the armistice was signed reconstruction in Belgium has been going forward at an astounding rate. During the war Belgium needed charity and received it. Now all Belgium requires is a chance to work. Of course, private charity will always be needed in Belgium, as in other countries, but the time has passed when Belgium as a country asks for charity. What Belgium needs most are the three essentials mentioned by President Wilson, namely, raw materials, machinery, and financial co-operation.

"If the practical assistance outlined by President Wilson were available immediately, these people and hundreds of thousands of others would gladly begin work. Even under present conditions, I am astonished, as I go about the country, to see the remarkable progress our people are making in rebuilding their homes and railroads and in continuing to operate small industrial plants. On the road between Malines and Brussels and between Malines and Louvain, while fully two-thirds of the houses were at least partially destroyed by the Germans, one-third have been rebuilt."

HAMBY TRIAL BEGINS TODAY.

The trial of Gordon Fawcett Hamby, confessed murderer of two employes of the East Brooklyn Savings Bank, will begin at 10 o'clock this morning before Justice Lewis L. Fawcett, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court in Brooklyn. District Attorney Harry E. Lewis will prosecute the case, and Frank X. McCaffry will defend Hamby. Mr. Lewis expects to finish presenting the State's case in one day. Mr. McCaffry has refused to give any inkling as to the plans of the defense.

In view of the character of Hamby, the District Attorney has requested that the utmost precautions be taken against any attempt at escape or rescue. Hamby will be handcuffed to two Deputy Sheriffs, and two others will be in constant attendance. Detectives will be in court prepared for an emergency.

As the court room will not hold more than 200 persons, attendance will be limited to persons having business connected with the trial. The District Attorney has refused to grant many requests for permission to attend.

At Raymond Street Jail yesterday, Hamby protested at what he termed the "unnecessary delay" in his trial. He said he was ready to go to the electric chair, and that the trial was a waste of time. Speculation has been indulged in regarding witnesses brought by the District Attorney from Tacoma, Wash., but beyond saying that among them were the Sheriff of Tacoma and Mrs. Robert Davis, widow of a man killed in that city by Hamby, Mr. Lewis has thrown no light on their identities.

NILES WED BEFORE SUICIDE.

Marriage Notice Follows Death of Ex-Naval Officer on Sunday.

The publication in the newspapers on Sunday of a marriage notice revealed the fact that Miss Dorothy Hathaway Sutton, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eli R. Sutton of Garden City, was married last Tuesday to Arthur L. Niles, Jr., a son of Arthur L. Niles of 315 West Eighteth Street. The day following his marriage Mr. Niles went to the Eightieth Street home, which had been boarded up for the Summer, and committed suicide by shooting himself in the head.

The marriage notice states that the couple were married in the West Side Methodist Episcopal Church. The name of the minister who performed the ceremony was not mentioned in the notice. Efforts to reach members of either family by telephone early this morning, in order to get further details of the marriage, were unsuccessful. At Garden City it was said that Mrs. Niles and her parents were not at home. The parents of the dead man were also said to be out of town.

EDUCATION PROGRAM ADOPTED BY LABOR

ASKS RIGHT TO ORGANIZE

Higher Salaries and Compulsory School Attendance Up to 16 Years Among Recommendations.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 22.—The educational policy of organized labor, consisting of a comprehensive report of the Committee on Education, was adopted today by the convention of the American Federdtion of Labor.

"It is unquestionable that teachers have no right to impose their personal views on pupils," the report said, "but it is necessary in some quarters to emphasize that neither do school authorities have that right. It is further necessary to ask this convention to indorse with all its power the principle that men and women, in becoming teachers, do not thereby surrender their rights as American citizens, and that inquisition by school authorities into the personal, religious, political, and economic views of teachers is intolerable in a free country. strikes at the basis of our public school system and can result only in the development of mental and moral servility, and the stultification of teachers and pupils alike."

This was read with applause by the delegates. It is understood the reference to the "inquisition" was aimed at recent action by education authorities in New York, Washington and other cities in examining teachers as to their personal opinions.

"The committee recommends that this convention urge all State and local central bodies to make a committee on education one of their standing committees, where this has not yet been done, and to make vigorous effort to secure adequate representation of organized labor on all Boards of Education," the report continued. "The right of teachers to affiliate with organized labor is beyond question, and in that connection the right of teachers to hold meetings in school buildings outside of school hours, for the purpose of discussing organization, should not be questioned. Boards of Education have no proprietary right in the schools, but are simply trustees for the public, of which the teachers are a part.

"To secure a more democratic administration of our schools, to develop a spirit of co-operation, and to gain for the community the benefit of the experience and initiative of the teaching body, Boards of Education and Superintendents of schools should confer with committees representing organizations of the teachers' choice in all cases of controversy between school authorities and teachers, and should consider and make official public record of suggestions dealing with the conduct of the schools, submitted by the teachers through such committees.

"Teachers should have tenure of position during efficiency. There should be no dismissals without full public hearings before a commission on which the teachers are represented."

List of Recommendations.

Other recommendations were: "A thoroughgoing revision upward of the salary schedules of teachers in public schools, normal schools and universities, to meet the increased cost of living.

"The liberal, ungrudging reorganization and increase of school revenues as the only means of maintaining and developing the efficiency of our public schools.

"Hearty support should be given to the increasing demand for well-considered methods of vocational guidance in our schools.

"In all courses of study, and particularly in industrial and educational courses, the privileges and obligations of intelligent citizenship must be taught vigorously and effectively; and, at least in all industrial and vocational courses an unbiased industrial history must be taught, which shall include accurate account of the organization of the workers and of the results thereof, and shall include a summary of all legislation, both State and Federal, affecting the industries taught.

"The basic language of instruction in all schools, both public and private, should be the English language, foreign languages to be taught only as subjects in the curriculum. Adequate facilities for the teaching of English to non-English-speaking people should be made.

"The provision of ample playground facilities as a part of the public school system.

"Continuous medical and dental inspection throughout the schools.

"Better enforcement of compulsory educational laws, and the universal establishment of a minimum school-leaving age of 16 years.

"The extension of a free textbook system to the District of Columbia and such States and communities as have not adopted it.

"Wider use of the school plant, securing increased returns to the community through additional civic, social, and educational services to both adults and children.

"Public forums should be established in every school where there is sufficient demand, under the direction of the Superintendent of Schools, working in co-operation with advisory committees representing the various elements in the community.

"The educational interests of the children and the future welfare of the State demand a drastic reduction in the prevailing size of classes.

"In view of the demonstration by war conditions of the industrial and educational value of the metric system, the committee recommends that the Executive Council cause an investigation to be made of the advantages of the introduction of the metric system into this country, with a view to determine what further steps, such as Congressional action, may be advisable."

"The power of effective self-expression and the habits of tolerance and of intellectual fairness toward opponents cannot be formed without the discussion of topics that give opportunity for their exercise. Therefore, to enable the schools to perform one of their chief functions, preparation for active citizenship, the pupils should be encouraged to discuss under intelligent supervision current events and the problems of citizenship."

The report of the committee was presented by Charles B. Stillman, President of the American Federation of Teachers. The convention is expected to adjourn tomorrow. Before the last word is said several important matters will be disposed of. The question of a demand for a six-hour day in industry will be discussed. A resolution called the "Espionage act" of the federation will be placed before the members. It would tie the hands of central labor bodies in general strikes, preventing their being called unless authorized by the international unions. Protest against the deportation of Hindoo agitators to India is embodied in another resolution.

BAY STATE CARMEN OUT ON 900 MILE SYSTEM

BOSTON, June 22.—Union carmen on the greater part of the 900-mile system of the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway, disregarding the advice of their International Union officers, went on strike today. No cars were taken from the barns after 4 A. M. An official of the company said late today that on the section of the system north of Boston cars were operated only in Gloucester. South of Boston, he said, the strike was effective only on the Quincy Division.

W. D. Mahon, President of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employes, who came here in the hope of averting the walkout, warned the men that unless they returned to work by tomorrow night he would revoke their local charters. Mahon said the strike could not be sanctioned because it was in violation of the union agreement with the company.

The strike arose from a strike of the Lowell carmen last Monday against the use of hand fare registers on open cars, on the ground that this endangered the lives of the conductors. When the general strike vote was taken the men added to the sympathy feature a demand for a revision of their working agreement. The men in Woburn and Lawrence went out in the middle of the week.

The usual heavy Sunday traffic on the company's country and seashore lines was diverted today partly to steam trains and partly to motor buses and jitneys, whose drivers made the most of their opportunity. Special jitney permits were granted in Chelsea and Revere to take care of the crowds wishing to go to Revere Beach.

President Mahon, in a letter sent to leaders of the striking carmen today, notified them that he had arranged to meet representatives of the company at 2 o'clock on Monday.

"I want," he wrote, "to be in a position to state just what the attitude of our membership on the system is going to be, and, therefore, I am appealing in every way to them to appreciate the situation and preserve their organization."

The letter called attention to the fact that most of the union men were entitled to full death, disability, and old age benefits from the amalgamated association, and added:

"I have worked hard for years to aid them in establishing these benefits that they might protect their wives and children, and I hate to see them throw them away now; but the integrity of this association must be maintained and our agreements upheld."

LIFTS BAN ON LABOR RALLY.

McKeesport Mayor Agrees to Plan of Federation Organizer.

PITTSBURGH, June 22.—The American Federation of Labor will be permitted to hold meetings in halls in McKeesport in its effort to organize iron and steel workers of this section, Mayor George F. Lysle today informed representatives of the labor body.

While the Federation Committee was in session with the Mayor, a meeting, under direction of American Federation of Labor organizers was in progress on a street corner in McKeesport.

The question of holding indoor meetings in McKeesport has been before the public for several months, labor leaders charging that the city officials were threatening them with arrest if they attempted to hold organization sessions.

William Z. Foster, Secretary of the Federation's National Committee, heralded the Mayor's decision as a victory for the American Federation of Labor's fight to "re-establish the right of free speech and free assembly" in McKeesport and other industrial towns of Western Pennsylvania.

He said that Mayor Lysle had placed certain restrictions upon his concession, which the committee will consider before deciding whether to accept or reject the offer.

The local committee in charge of the organizing campaign will meet on Tuesday to act on the proposition.

According to the Federation Committee, Mayor Lysle stipulated that meetings in halls could be held only when speeches in a foreign tongue were eliminated, and providing that Secretary Foster would not address such sessions. The labor committee termed the Mayor's restrictions "ridiculous."

TORONTO CAR MEN STRIKE, TIE UP CITY

Reject Conciliation Plan, as Company Declares It Is Running at a Loss.

TORONTO, June 22.—Toronto street railway employes struck today for 55 cents an hour and an eight-hour day following an almost unanimous strike vote taken this morning. The strike tied up all city lines, but civic-owned lines in the outlying districts and the radial roads running to the city limits are operating as usual.

The strike has not been sanctioned by the international organization with which the car men are affiliated. The men refused to submit their claims to a board of conciliation appointed by the Government. It is understood the employes felt this board could do little for them, as the company declares an investigation of its books would show they are running at a loss. City authorities have declined to consider any increase in fares.

WINNIPEG QUIETS DOWN.

Martial Law Ends and Federal Troops Retire to Barracks.

WINNIPEG, Manitoba, June 22.—Martial law, which was declared in this city yesterday, when striking union men attempted to parade despite orders of Mayor Charles F. Gray against a demonstration, was ended this afternoon. Returned soldier constables are now policing the city in the place of Federal soldiers, who have been withdrawn to their barracks.

The city is now quiet, following the rioting yesterday, in which one man was killed and several injured, when Royal Northwest Mounted Police charged into a crowd which had assembled to parade. Street car service, which ended with the rioting, has not been resumed, but company officials said cars would be operated tomorrow.

INDORSE LABOR PRINCIPLES.

Vote of Employers Favors 12 Out of 13 Included in Referendum.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Twelve principles of industrial relations have been indorsed by American employers as represented in the membership of the United States Chamber of Commerce. A canvass of a referendum vote announced today showed the proposal for a national employment system to have been the only article of thirteen which failed to receive the two-thirds majority.

Underlying the cardinal principle that "the public interest requires adjustment of industrial relations by peaceful methods," were those declaring "the right of workers to organize"; that "industrial harmony and prosperity will be most effectually promoted by adequate representation of the parties interested"; and that "industrial relations agreements should be faithfully observed."

Other declarations approved were that wages should be "reduced only when the possibility of reduction of costs in all other directions has been exhausted"; that every man is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living wage, and that "wages should be adjusted with due regard to their purchasing power."

Fixing of a basic day as a "device for increasing compensation" was held to be a "subterfuge that should be condemned."

CALLS PEACE TREATY UNFAIR TO CHINA

JUST DEMANDS REFUSED

Sees Blow to National Entity in Substitution of Japanese Interests for German.

Dr. Gilbert Reid, who had lived in China for thirty-seven years, and during a large portion of this time had served as head of the International Institute, declared yesterday at the Young Men's Christian Association, at 215 West Twenty-third Street, that if he were a Chinese delegate at the peace table he would not sign the treaty, "even though Germany can do nothing else, and if I signed, I would not sign with reservations, but with an emphatic protest." While in China Dr. Reid says he came into conflict with the plans of the British and French Governments. He says he was not protected by America; but, yielding to a request of the Chinese, this country allowed him to be deported to Manila for the duration of the war. He returned to the United States a year ago.

"The treatment China has received for a century is a blot on Western civilization," said Dr. Reid. "The way her reasonable requests have been turned down by the Big Three—Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemenceau—representing three democratic peoples, is not only a disappointment to the 400,000,000 of Chinese, but is a blow to the qualities of justice, generosity, love of freedom, belief in self-determination, devotion to the interests of weak nations, and general consistency and moral courage, which have been so loudly professed as the special possession of the group arrayed against the Central Powers.

"Japan is being severely blamed these days, but other nations, even the United States, must take their share of the blame.

"As between Japan and Western nations, Japan has special interests in China, but as between China and Japan, China alone has special interests in China, as Japan has them in Japan.

"What I object to is the ease with which men condemn the action of Japan and yet would sign a treaty allowing to Japan all that she demands. This treaty business thus becomes a glaring exhibition of condoning wrong. Even the Chinese delegates are being advised to stultify themselves by signing their own doom in the vain hope that the League of Nations, having begun wrong, will be able to make amends later.

China's Rights Thrust Aside.

"The way China's rights have been thrust aside is enough to condemn the treaty. And the treaty, be it remembered, is the first fruits of the covenant of the League of Nations. I regard the League of Nations in its present form as far below the standard of President Wilson's announced principles—principles which the enemy nations had to accept before armistice was granted; and I regard the treaty of peace as far below the covenant of the League of Nations. The way China has been treated is enough to convince all lovers of justice that they should have no part in either treaty or league until brought into accord with justice. They both need to be modified.

"The most important section relating to China does not even mention China. A visitor from Mars—Mars in the heavens or Mars in Europe—reading this document, would not suppose that China had any existence. Germany and Japan are the only countries mentioned. There are two main features in the arrangement whereby Japan gains what she demands and China loses what she has worked for, argued for, and has regarded as her legal and moral right. The one is that the territory of Kiao-Chau, including Tsing-tao, leased to Germany by China, is not ceded to China, the original property owner, and one of the contracting parties, but ceded to Japan. The other is that all railway and mining concessionary rights granted to Germany by China in Shantung are not ceded to China, but to Japan. What is worse is that the treaty confirms and blesses the principles of right of conquest, and conquest, moreover, acquired in violation of international law, that is, the rule that forbids a belligerent to march across neutral territory. In addition, the secret agreement made with Japan early in 1917 by the Ambassadors in Tokio of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Russia, is now confirmed by this treaty of peace."

"China was induced to go into the war at American initiative, that she might be represented at the Peace Conference, but the only result is that China gains the resentment of Japan by turning to the United States, Great Britain and France for relief from Japanese aggressions.

"Substituting Japanese interests for German may, indeed, be a blow to Germany, but it is also a blow to China, in that Japan gains so preponderating an influence that the past equilibrium is destroyed and China's national entity is threatened. More than all, justice receives a blow. Because we are glad to see Germans injured, we overlook the injury done to the Chinese.

"If it be said that compromise was necessary, or Japan, like Italy, would have withdrawn from the Peace Conference, I reply that a bad start in a League of Nations forebodes evil for the future, and, what is more, there ought to be no compromise on a question of right and justice. America's high ideals are too much at stake. A settlement should not be reached by a threat."

GIFT BY SALVATION ARMY.

Offers $20,000 for Decorating 1st Division Graves and Battlefields.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

Special Cable to The New York Times.

COBLENZ, June 21.—Colonel William S. Barker, head of the A. E. F. work of the Salvation Army, has offered Major Gen. McLachlin, commanding the 1st Division, 100,000 francs to be used in decorating the graves and battlefields of the division. General McLachlin will accept the money.

Colonel Barker's offer stated the money comes from the surplus in the operation of the Salvation Army canteen.

NEW PICTORIAL PAPER.

The Illustrated Daily News to Appear This Week.

A new pictorial daily, The Illustrated Daily News, is to appear Thursday morning and thereafter every day except Sunday. It will sell for 2 cents. The publishers are the News Syndicate Company, Inc., a subsidiary corporation of The Chicago Tribune. The officers are Joseph Medill Patterson, President; R. R. McCormick, Vice President and Treasurer; William H. Field, Second Vice President; George Utassy, Secretary; Emory Thomason, Assistant Secretary, and Arthur L. Clarke, managing editor. The publication offices will be in The Evening Mail Building, City Hall Place.

The new paper will follow to some extent the lines of the London illustrated dailies. News will be printed in condensed form. There will be a cartoon by John T. McCutcheon, and features syndicated by The Chicago Tribune will be produced.

The feature expected to attract initial attention to the venture is the offer of a $10,000 prize for the "most beautiful girl in New York City," open to all young women except "professional beauties." The judges will be D. W. Griffith, the moving picture producer; Harrison Fisher, the artist, and George M. Cohan, the theatrical manager. A second prize of $2,500, and a third of $1,000 is offered.

NEARLY DROWNED AT CONEY.

Couple Upset a Mile from Shore, Rescued by Life Guard.

While Miss Mollie Greenfield, 17, of 74 Tompkins Avenue, Brooklyn, was out in a rowboat at Coney Island yesterday with Albert Altman of 161 Vernon Avenue, Brooklyn, the boat was upset about a mile off shore. Altman made a brave attempt to rescue his companion and swim to shore, but gave out. Meanwhile a life guard from the Whitney Baths had put out from the beach, and reached the exhausted couple just in time to save them in his boat. They were removed to the Coney Island Hospital for treatment. Altman was able to leave later, but Miss Greenfield remained in the hospital in a serious condition.

In their crusade against bathers who parade in the park and streets without sufficient covering, the police yesterday served fourteen summonses.

RUMANIAN DECREE EMANCIPATES JEWS

Act Belatedly Fulfilling Promise of Citizenship Made Public by Legation.

AFFECTS 300,000 PEOPLE

Applies Only to Old Rumania, Pending Readjustment of Borders by Peace Conference.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—A copy of the decree emancipating the Jews of Rumania has been received by the Rumanian Legation, and its contents made known to the Chairman of the Committee on Rumanian Affairs of the American Jewish Congress. The document, as given out by N. H. Lahovary, Chargé d'Affaires and Secretary of the Legation, reads in part:

"Under the Presidency of the Council of Ministers, Ferdinand I., by the grace of God and the national desire King of Rumania, regarding the report of the President of the Council of Ministers and the Ministerial Secretary of State, at the Department of Justice, under No. 815, in the year 1919, we decree:

"Article 1. All the Jewish inhabitants of our old kingdom who are adults and who have been born in the country or who happened to be born in foreign countries of parents residing in this country, who have not been subject of any foreign State, are hereby declared to be Rumanian citizens, and they should from today on enjoy all the rights accorded to citizens, if they manifest such desire by declaring that they were born in Rumania and that they have not enjoyed any foreign protection.

"Those who have satisfied the military law or who have been mobilized for any of the wars since 1913, until the present day, even if they were minors at the time, also the widows and legitimate children of the deceased in these campaigns since 1913, until today, need not make any affirmations that they have been born in the country, and that they have not enjoyed any foreign protection. It is sufficient that they desire to obtain the rights of citizenship, and they should express such desire.

"Article 2. The widows and legitimate children, minors, of those who have made such declaration shall be considered as fully enfranchised; also the widows, the minors, and legitimate children of those naturalized individually before the publication of this decree, and whose children who are or were minors at the time of naturalization shall enjoy all benefits of this decree.

"Article 3. No question as to religion of the applicant shall be required."

After designating the questions to be asked and answered by the applicant, such as name, family connections, &c., the decree announces there is to be no special tax required for citizenship. The decree continues:

"Article 4. All those Jews who have had their applications denied under the decree of December, 1918, have the right to make a new application in conformity with this decree. The decree of December, 1918, is hereby abrogated.

Council of Ministers and our Ministers, Secretary of State, and the Department of Justice are hereby charged to make this decree public and see to it that it is carried out in full.

"FERDINAND.

"D. BUZDUGAN, Member of the Department of Justice.

"Given at Bucharest, Rumania, under the Great Official Seal of the State, in the year 1919, May 28."

Letters are attached to the document directing it to the attention of the Parliament and the approval of the legislative branch of the Government is attested by the signature to it of the Prime Minister, John Bratiano.

Ex-Assemblyman Solomon Sufrin, Chairman of the Committee of Rumanian Affairs of the American Jewish Congress, said last night that he had received an official copy of the decree from the legation at Washington, which he had brought here to present to the committee on Wednesday.

"The decree means that 300,000 Jews are to get equal rights and political freedom in Rumania," said Mr. Sufrin. "We are somewhat disappointed over the fact that the terms of the decree refer only to the old kingdom of Rumania. This, it was explained to me at the legation, was due to the fact that it was not yet known by the Government of Rumania what additional territory may be alloted by the Peace Conference, and that, whatever this may be, the decree will ultimately extend to all parts of new Rumania as well.

"Since 1878 Jews throughout the world have agitated and sought by every means to induce Rumania to keep the promise made by that Government in the Berlin treaty of that year, to give equal rights to the Jews. Rumania was not then a kingdom, but the promise was the basis on which the treaty makers established her as a kingdom. We believe this action is the direct outcome of the stand taken by President Wilson, in which he asserted that minority rights of all peoples should be protected."

THEATRE PARISIEN TO HAVE TWO COMPANIES

One to Give Little Comedies and Operettas, the Other Dramatic Plays in Alternating Seasons.

The status of the French drama in New York City for the season ahead was explained yesterday by Richard G. Herndon, who was for two seasons executive manager of Jacques Copeau's Theatre du Vieux Colombier in this city, and who is associated also with the proposed Theatre Parisien, which will be housed at the Belmont next season. Mr. Herndon returned a few days ago from France, where he had gone in quest of plays and players for the Theatre Parisien.

"Although the Vieux Colombier will not return to the United States next season," said Mr. Herndon, "it is not unlikely that it may play another season in New York a year hence, to be followed by a brief tour. The proposed Theatre Parisien will be an entirely different type of project. It will be more of the intimate type, with lighter entertainment than was offered by the other company.

"The programs will include a one-act comedy or farce, with a short operetta or musical comedy, with various dramatic and musical novelties interspersed. The company will include many well known French artists, who will be announced presently."

After a season of twenty weeks at the Theatre Parisien the company will go on tour, and the stage of the Belmont will then be occupied by a French dramatic company. This latter organization will go on tour at the beginning of the season, alternating with the other company. There will be no attempt to make a weekly change of program at the Belmont, but each play will be continued so long as the demand justifies.

More Pay for Electrical Workers.

Five hundred and fifty men employed in the aerial construction squad of the New York and Queens Electric Light and Power Company have been given a 10 per cent. increase in wages, starting today. The men had presented no grievances nor demands for more money. The raise affects foremen, linemen, troublemen, and groundmen.

Summer Banking

Are you leaving town for the summer?

If so, you do not want your doubtless well earned vacation to be disturbed by petty affairs of personal banking, nor the care of your securities, jewelry, and other valuables.

The Harriman National Bank will receive on special deposit your securities, collecting the interest on bonds, and receiving for credit to your account dividend checks.

Any remittances, as rents or like forms of income, may be made for your account with the bank for acknowledgment to you by mail.

Should you be located distant from large centers, we will transmit currency to meet your needs by registered mail or by express.

The Safe Deposit Vaults of the Harriman National Bank offer modern safeguards for the protection of valuables of small compass.

If you are travelling from place to place, the safest and the best method of carrying funds is by traveller's check, which may be cashed at practically any bank of standing in the United States, Canada, or abroad, and is generally accepted by hotels and business houses in settlement of accounts.

Do not leave town without paying your bills. Recollect that the merchant requires the money to pay his own bills, and he is not always in a position to borrow the funds therefor from his bank. Particularly, pay your bills to the small tradesman, the newspaper dealer, for example. And do not forget to provide for the cat!

He was lost in the forest—

But only for a moment. Two things he remembered: That whortle-berries always grow on the north side of ant-hills and that large pine trees bear more numerous branches on their southern side.

Experience saved him from wandering aimlessly. The rest was easy.

Many a successful firm is similarly lost in its accounting department—literally bewildered by ledger problems that seem impassable.

We believe the experience of Library Bureau is your safest guide in finding a way out of your difficulties. Once you get the fundamentals right (and the L. B. Card ledger is fundamentally right) the rest is easy.

The L. B. Card ledger, machine posted, is used today in hundreds of banks and commercial houses.

It saves posting time—hours daily. Accounts are easy-to-find. The cards are easy-to-handle. They drop right into place on the posting machine. They are readily re-filed: housed in a special tray that holds them in correct working position. Every account—any account—is get-at-able at any time.

NEW LAW DELAYS AQUITANIA IN BAY

COUNT DI ZIPPOLA ON BOARD

A cable announcement that Herbert Hoover had sailed from Liverpool on the Cunard liner Aquitania resulted in a small army of moving picture photographers and reporters at the Cunard piers when the steamship docked yesterday, but no one could be found who resembled the Director General of the Interallied Relief Organization. A call boy paged Herbert Hoover and a man with that patronymic answered.

"I'm Herbert Hoover all right, but I create vacuums, while the man you are looking for fills them," he said.

Mr. Hoover explained he was a manufacturer of vacuum cleaners. He said that during the entire voyage he was mistaken for the Food Controller, although he pointed out that he had none of the physical characteristics of his namesake.

The Aquitania, which stopped at Halifax with 3,000 Canadian soldiers, brought 168 saloon passengers to this port. Her docking was delayed two hours by a new State health inspection law which went into effect yesterday. All the crew were examined by health officers, which met the liner at Quarantine. It was said the new law would delay the docking of every vessel coming to port.

Major L. H. Armour of Chicago, a cousin of J. Ogden Armour, returned from service in France, where he said he had charge of the inspection of frozen beef sent to the American troops. Major Armour, who was demobilized abroad, said there was a decided meat shortage in England and France. Both countries will be dependent on outside sources for their supply for a long time, he said.

Captain H. A. Innes-Brown of 26 West Fifty-ninth Street, was on the liner. He said he had been in France since December, 1915, with the Sanitary Train of the 1st Division. He was wounded during the Argonne drive. He said he had aided Mrs. G. A. McKinlock, a Red Cross worker, also on the Aquitania, find the grave of her son, Lieutenant Alexander McKinlock, who was killed at Soissons, July 21, last year.

Count Mario Panciera di Zippola, who is to marry Miss Edith Mortimer, daughter of Stanley Mortimer, on Saturday, said he expected to be here rather but was delayed by Government business. He said he was also here on a Government mission.

Stella Chatelaine, wife of Leon Errol, the comedian, now playing in London, fell of having caught the Aquitania just before the vessel sailed by means of an airplane. She said she had been visiting friends at Hounslow, near London, and missed the train for Southampton. She said she appealed to Colonel Henderson, commander of an aviation field nearby, and he placed a pilot and plane at her disposal. The eighty-mile trip was made in seventy-five minutes, she said.

Lott Gadd, a barber, who is known to travelers on Cunard boats, and boasts of his friendship with financiers and notables, gave a remarkable demonstration of his memory for faces and names. Five years ago, Guy Lenstrand, now a Lieutenant in the Royal Flying Corps, who is attached to the British Consulate in this city, left a pipe, which he valued for sentimental reasons, in Gadd's barber shop. He wrote to Gadd, asking that he keep the pipe. If it should be found, until they should meet again.

The war came on. Yesterday Lieutenant Lenstrand went aboard the Aquitania and almost the first man he saw was Gadd.

"Mr. Lenstrand, I've got your pipe in my locker, and if you'll wait a moment I'll go and get it. I remember you had stateroom 126 on the Lusitania five years ago," Gadd said. Lieutenant Lenstrand said he long ago had given up hope of recovering the pipe and had forgotten the name and face of the barber who shaved him. Gadd was on the Lusitania when she was torpedoed.

The transports, the Patria, the Western Scout, and the Henry R. Mallory, docked yesterday in Brooklyn, bringing about 5,000 troops. The 9th Aero Squadron, known as the Owls, because its members did most of their work at night, was on the Patria. The unit, which was overseas twenty months, saw service in the Argonne and St. Mihiel offensives. Officers of the squadron said that after the signing of the armistice the fliers did photograph work which, they declare, would make it impossible for Germany to start another war. With the aid of photographs they took, they said, the artillery could shell Germany to pieces. The Patria also brought back the Second Army Provisional Sanitary Train and the Second Balloon Company.

The Western Scout had on board six officers and seventy enlisted men, mostly casuals, and the Henry R. Mallory, fifty-four officers and 2,038 men, belonging to ammunition train and military police units.

WOMAN ROBBED AND BEATEN

Miss Dorothy Davenport of Brooklyn Victim of Brutal Attack.

Miss Dorothy Davenport, 25 years old, of 340 Winthrop Street, Brooklyn, was found at 2 o'clock yesterday morning at Avenue U and Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, near the border of Flatlands Bay, wandering about dazed, after having been beaten and robbed of diamond rings worth $1,200. She was found by Mrs. S. Stewart of 97 Kenilworth Street, Brooklyn, who summoned an ambulance and had her sent to Kings County Hospital.

After treatment at the hospital Miss Davenport was sent to her home, where her father, F. C. Davenport, a real estate dealer, telephoned to the police. The woman told detectives that she had gone to the Bay View Hotel in company with two young women, and there met three men, with whom they were acquainted. After several dances, she said, the party of six started for their homes. They took a car to Flatbush Avenue and Avenue U, and alighted there to change cars. Here, she said, the party were attacked by three young men to whom they had been introduced by their escorts at the Bay View Hotel.

According to Miss Davenport, the three men and the two girls who were with her fled and left her to her fate. She put up a fight, in which she sustained the injuries, but was finally overpowered and robbed of her jewelry.

The detectives later arrested a young man, 21 years old, who gave the name of J. J. Muiqueen. He admitted being at the Bay View Hotel and seeing Miss Davenport there, but denied that he had had anything to do with the attack made upon her.

GEORGIA ALLEN A SUICIDE.

Grief Causes Widow of Noted Horse Trainer to Kill Herself.

Mrs. Georgia Allen, widow of Matthew Allen, who was in his day one of the best known race horse trainers in the United States, committed suicide, by inhaling gas yesterday afternoon, in the home of her niece, Mrs. William Wieland, 133 Eighth Avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Allen was 70 years old and grief over her husband's death, and the subsequent death of her son, Matthew Allen, Jr., is believed to have caused her to kill herself, as letters found in the room in which she died referred to her bereavement. Mr. Allen died in June of last years and the son a few months later.

Matthew Allen, Sr., trained some of the most famous race horses of American turf history. He was at different times trainer for the late William C. Whitney, the late James R. Keene, and the owners of other famous stables.

ASKS FOR LITHUANIA FULL INDEPENDENCE

ATTITUDE OF POLES FEARED

Speaker at Meeting Here Doubtful of Paderewski's Good Intentions —League of Nations Approved.

Immediate recognition of the Lithuanian Republic and the cessation of the invasion of Lithuanian territory were the demands made upon the Government of the United States and the American peace delegation by a meeting held yesterday afternoon at the Vanderbilt Theatre under the auspices of the Lithuanian National Council. F. B. Mostowski, President of the Council and counselor to the Lithuanian peace mission in Paris, sharply criticised the utterances of Premier Paderewski of Poland, and declared there was no intention on the part of the Premier to approve the independence of Lithuania, a country which was in a strategical position that was coveted by various nations, especially Poland.

Mark Ebner, former Revenue Collector, who presided, said that peace could not be maintained if strong nations were permitted to overcome weaker ones, and that Lithuania was a small nation which should be permitted to exist independent of any other. He further said that the League of Nations must be supported if this principle were to remain valid after the signing of the Peace Treaty.

The Rev. Dr. J. Zelus addressed his audience in Lithuanian, and between the speeches the parish choir of the Church of the Annunciation sang Lithuanian folk songs. At the close of the meeting the following resolutions were adopted unanimously by those present, who were said to represent 300,000 members of Lithuanian societies in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

Whereas, We, the American citizens of Lithuanian origin, having loyally supported the Government of the United States in the prosecution of war against autocracy and militarism, feel that the lasting settlement of the war depends upon the sound solution of the Baltic problem and the claim of the Lithuanian people; therefore be it

Resolved, That we hereby respectfully petition his Excellency, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, Department of State, United States Senate, the House of Representatives, and American peace delegation for immediate recognition of the independence of the Lithuanian Republic and its present Government as de facto Government of the independent Lithuanian Republic; and also be it

Resolved, That we protest against invasion of the Lithuanian territory, especially the city of Vilnius, the capital of Lithuania, by Poles, Bolsheviki or any other foreign aggressors; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to President Wilson, to the Senators and Representatives of our States, to the American peace delegation, and to the Department of State.

In opening his address Mr. Mostowski emphasized the fact that most of those present were native Lithuanians who had come to America and had become Americans because they appreciated the privilege of living in a land of liberty such as they had not enjoyed before the war. "Every Lithuanian," he continued, "would rather die fighting than give up the independence that has now come. Poland would like to take us under its wings, but the Lithuanian delegates to the Peace Conference said that they took the position that they would be willing to have representatives of the League of Nations control any part of their territory which might be the subject of dispute until such time as a plebiscite might be held. The Poles would not listen to that. We read today, however, that Paderewski says: 'The Poles do not deny the right of the Lithuanians to independence.' But we know that he says that merely for public consumption at a time when it is too late. He follows it up by declaring that autonomy should be established by the immediate holding of a plebiscite, when he knows that if it were held immediately, while the territory is occupied by Polish and allied soldiers, the people would have to vote just as their masters dictated."

Mr. Ebner impressed upon his audience his conviction that they were meeting as fellow Americans who wanted the same principles of liberty which they enjoyed applied to the people across the seas. "We want to help any people, anywhere," he declared, "that is trying to set up as an independent and free nation like our own.

BIGGEST WARSHIPS TO GUARD PACIFIC

MOUNT 14-INCH GUNS

Fine weather and a hearty welcome on the part of officers and enlisted men brought thousands of visitors to the dreadnoughts of the Atlantic Fleet, now anchored in the Hudson, yesterday afternoon. In the case of some of the dreadnoughts the present visit will probably be the last to New York for many months if not years to come, for it is the understanding in the fleet that the great oil-burning superdreadnoughts are shortly to be withdrawn from the Atlantic organization and sent to the west coast to form the backbone of the new Pacific Fleet under Admiral Hugh Rodman.

The present fleet will be divided in the next few weeks, half going to the Pacific and the other half remaining in the Atlantic as the Atlantic Fleet under Admiral Henry B. Wilson. While the orders giving the organization of the new fleets has not yet been received on the flagships, it is believed certain that the Pennsylvania, now flagship of the Atlantic Fleet, will go to the Pacific as flagship of Admiral Rodman, the other superdreadnoughts to be assigned to the Pacific Fleet being the New Mexico, Arizona, Idaho, Mississippi, Nevada, Oklahoma, and Tennessee. These are the newest first line units of the United States Navy, and in each instance they mount main batteries of fourteen-inch guns.

The dreadnoughts of the new Atlantic Fleet, of which the Wyoming will probably be the flagship, will be the New York, Texas, Utah, Arkansas, Florida, Delaware, and North Dakota. These are the twelve-inch dreadnoughts of the navy, and the proposed lineup of the two fleets means that in gun power the Pacific will be at least one-third more powerful than its sister fleet in the Atlantic.

There will be two divisions of dreadnoughts in each fleet. The flagship of the second division in the Atlantic will be the Utah, while the New Mexico will be the flagship of the second Pacific Division.

There will also be in each ocean two division of older battleships, those in the Atlantic being the Minnesota, Connecticut, Louisiana, New Hampshire, Kansas, South Carolina, and Michigan, while the two Pacific divisions will include the Virginia, New Jersey, Georgia, Rhode Island, and Nebraska. The flagships of these divisions in the Atlantic will be the Minnesota and Connecticut and in the Pacific the Virginia and the Georgia.

The armored cruisers that will serve with the Atlantic Fleet are the Huntington, which will be the flagship, and the Wheeling, South Dakota, Frederick, Pittsburgh, Topeka, Dolphin, and Castine, the cruisers assigned to the Pacific Fleet being the Seattle as flagship, and the Montana, North Carolina, Pueblo, Cleveland, Denver, Tacoma, Marblehead, Machias, and Vicksburg.

The destroyers, submarines, and auxiliaries will also be divided about equally between the two fleets. The organization of the fleets will probably be announced in the next few days, and it is felt certain that the lineup of the two fleets will be as outlined above.

On the ships yesterday the main topic of conversation was the scuttling of the German ships at Scapa Flow by their German crews. The action of the Germans was denounced, as a rule, as bordering on treachery, as it was pointed out that every German officer and seaman on the ships was pledged to observe the terms of the armistice under the provisions of which the German High Sea Fleet was surrendered.

Admiral Rodman, who commanded the American dreadnoughts in the Grand Fleet, was not on his flagship, the New York, yesterday, and in his absence none of his staff officers who were seen felt at liberty to discuss the act of the Germans at Scapa Flow. Admiral Rodman with Admiral Sir David Beatty received the surrender of the German ships.

SIX BANDITS HOLD UP CLUB.

PROVIDENCE, June 22.—Six masked gunmen drove up to the Susquehanna Club, Woonsocket, late last night in a big touring car, and holding up the patrons of the place got away with about $1,300.

Former Representative Albert Renaud, President of the club, admitted today that the place had been raided by masked bandits. A Boston man had been relieved of $1,250, while Woonsocket men were relieved of smaller amounts. The holdup was accomplished without excitement, there being no resistance on the part of the victims, and the robbers departed in the automobile unmolested.

BULLETIN No. 1

New York City's Telephone Service is Being Restored to Normal

As Fast as the Exacting Requirements of the Work permit, the Additional Facilities Necessary to Handling New York City's Increased Telephone Load Are Being Provided.

TO restore to New York City, telephone service of the type that was recognized in pre-war-days as "The Best Telephone Service in the World," we are now engaged in carrying out a comprehensive, well-defined program that is designed to provide the essential additional facilities.

We are spending $26,500,000 for new buildings, new switchboards, additions to existing switchboards, new cable facilities and other new equipment in large quantities.

We are giving intensive training to hundreds of young women to prepare them for Central Office positions. Day by day former employees released from military service are returning to their old positions.

Enough skilled workers — adequate equipment — these are the factors which will determine the date of the restoration of normal telephone service for "The Telephone Capital of the World."

This restoration program is of interest to YOU and we plan to tell you from time to time about its progress in detail so that you may share with us an understanding of the fact that telephone service in New York City is NOW on the way toward normal, but that COMPLETE restoration to pre-war service standards must of necessity be gradual.

DECLARES GERMANS MORAL BANKRUPTS

MISLED BY THEIR PASTORS

He Declares Ministers Counseled Accepting Terms the Nation Had No Intention to Fulfill.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Those who have visited Germany recently and observed the servility of the German people toward Americans and learned something of their present morale are not surprised at the sinking of the German battleships interned at Scapa Flow. Representatives M. Clyde Kelley of Pennsylvania and W. Frank James of Michigan recently returned from a trip which took them into Germany and the occupied area.

Mr. Kelley said that he had seen enough and heard sufficient in Germany to convince him that there was no difference between the German people and the German Government. Everywhere, he said, there was convincing evidence of moral bankruptcy, while industrially the country was prepared to resume her activity and take her place in the front rank so far as ability to produce is concerned.

"When I was told by reliable persons that many ministers in Germany were counseling the acceptance of the treaty, and, at the same time, telling their flocks that the keeping of it was a different thing, I cannot see that the war has changed the Germans," said Mr. Kelley. "It is just such counsel as this, and the assumed servility of the Germans toward Americans, that makes it necessary to enforce a severe indemnity upon Germany.

"The sinking of the German battleships—the property of the Allies—is only an outgrowth of immoral teachings from the pulpit and the press of Germany today. And I do not hesitate to say that this same German influence operating now will become stronger after peace is signed, with the result that the League of Nations will be kept busy enforcing the peace terms. When officers, pulpit, and press are intellectually dishonest, nothing better can be expected."

"No one can put into words the contrast between France and Germany today," continued Mr. Kelley, in contrasting the conditions in France with Germany. "On one side of the boundary is desolation supreme, on the other is prosperity and absolute ignorance of the horrors of war.

"If President Wilson and the members of the Peace Conference would travel, as I did, through France and Germany there would be no doubt or delay in fixing the indemnity which Germany must pay. They would simply figure the cost of the war into which Germany plunged the world and present the bill for payment. Germany can pay, and only by paying will she ever realize what the war has really meant.

"For days I went through that great territory in France which has been devastated into a desert. Once prosperous towns and cities have disappeared; the very soil itself has been destroyed. The country is one vast cemetery.

"I went through Belleau Wood, where the marines won undying fame; Chateau-Thierry, where last Summer I saw the 28th Division blast its way through machine gun nests; Sergy, Ville-en-Tardenois, Fismes, Soissons, Rheims, Montfalcon, Varenne, Verdun, San Mihiel. I went through the Argonne Forest, where Americans stormed impregnable positions and sent the Germans flying in rout.

"Everywhere was ruin, stark and complete.

Sees Germany Untouched by War.

"Then I crossed the line into Germany. Here was a country which looked as though it had basked for centuries in the sunshine of peace. Towns and villages were thriving; farm lands and vineyards growing and productive.

"I went through Treves, Cobienz, Bruges, Mayence, Weisbaden, and many rich cities. Everywhere the stores were filled with goods at prices about half what they were in France. The streets were filled with well-dressed men and women, not a German uniform to be seen.

"As for wounded men, I have seen more armless and legless veterans on a single corner in Washington than I saw in all Germany. Where they are I do not know, but there are no war cripples in the Rhine provinces.

"I found the Germans with whom I came in contact a race of Uriah Heeps. Servility and an apparent desire to lie down and let us walk on them seemed the keynote.

"In the stores clerks and proprietors begged to sell us Iron Crosses and German souvenirs from the battlefields.

"In every window were handkerchiefs and other articles, on which were embroidered the names of the American divisions in the Army of Occupation, and the victorious battles in which they fought.

"I bought one of these in one store and asked that my change include a 50-pfennig coin for a pocket-piece. With a smile the proprietor gave me my full change and then asked me to accept the coin as a gift, a souvenir of Germany to America.

"I found the American doughboys bored and weary. They were homesick for America as they had never been in the war days. At first deceived by the eager welcome given by the Germans, they had seen enough to know that the brutality was only cloaked under a sickening servility, and they were disgusted through and through.

"Wherever I went I was entreated by the doughboys to help get them out of this country where the 'Germans will kiss you and then steal the gold fillings out of your teeth.'

Calls Germans "Moral Bankrupts."

"I found that this feeling was due to to the fact that there is moral bankruptcy in Germany. Civilian officials would not allow us to leave our overcoats in the outer hall because they would be stolen. In fact, the realization by the public that all the teachings of press, pulpit, school, and Kaiser for forty years have been built on lies has seemingly resulted in moral wreck as well as mental confusion.

"At Coblenz, I found the headquarters of the American Army of Occupation. As we came out on the Rhine, the lordliest river in Europe, the outstanding feature was the great fort of Ehrenbreitstein, set on the top of a great cliff. And on its very top, floating bravely in the breeze, was the Stars and Stripes. The fortress is manned by American soldiers and the whole territory is under American rule.

"Across the river is the great statue of William I. of Hohensollern, a gigantic figure, which, with uplifted sword, grimly watches over the Rhine.

"'This is the famous 'Der Wacht am Rhine,' and it is more or less laughable as it stands there now, the marble eyes apparently staring straight across the great river at the American flag.

"At the base of the statue I saw scribbled by a doughboy these words: 'This watch has been repaired by the Yankees—guaranteed to keep good time in the future.'

"As I came away from Coblenz I saw a line of German men and women, extending four blocks, waiting patiently before American Headquarters to get passes so that they might leave the city for a day. There was no protest nor anger, only a meek and quiet submission.

"That is Germany. She is endeavoring to escape punishment by her apparent innocence and childlike humility. Only by forcing her to pay the cost will she realize the absolute failure both of ruthless brutality and weak servility."

CALLS NEW GERMANY A SHAM.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, June 22.—"Germany has neither repented nor reformed," said Dr. M. L. Llewellyn Raney, Librarian of Johns Hopkins University, today. Dr. Raney has just returned from France, where he went as an official of the American Library Association, under instructions of the State Department and the War Trade Board.

"German spirit is as ugly as ever," he said. "Germany merely lacks power of harm for the moment; terribly mortified, of course, over public miscarriage of plans, but feeling no contrition for the monstrous crime committed.

"It is a sham republic, with the old, execrated figures in the immediate background, whispering directions and pulling wires. Von Bernstorff, still held in honor, is sufficient proof of the mockery of the show."

"Victorious in the field to the end,' they say, 'but tricked by diplomacy.' Wilson, whom they hoped to dupe to their ends, has 'yielded to the Tiger,' 'broken his word,' and is hence execrated. And they are talking about revenge in ten or fifteen years. Democratic Germany talks about the 'final conflict' with the Anglo-Saxon for world dominion.

"The existing Government is in reality a combination of the upper and lower classes, the old Imperialists and the new Socialists, both extreme. It is true that, before the war, there was a growing hostility to absolutism, so that there was an adverse majority in the Reichstag, although it did not have power proportionate to what it had to be in order to attain its end.

"German trade plans are interesting. Not only is it true that, while they are making wry faces over the Sarre Valley question, they are setting up stolen Belgian and French machinery ready for post-bellum business, but they are preparing for discriminatory prices against foreign traders.

"At least, it is true, in the field in which I happen to be interested, that there has recently come into being a powerful association of publishers, highly exclusive and very powerful, with a membership fee of 1,000 marks per year, which is endeavoring to enforce the practice to charge American and other foreign imports from 50 to 100 per cent. more than the same article is sold to the German trade, and this without the erection of a tariff wall.

"Furthermore, the President of that organization goes to the extent in his own establishment of publicly stating that the Americans cannot have his goods except upon the terms of cash with order, an unheard of proceeding."

HOPE TO DIVIDE THE ALLIES.

Sermons Urge Refusal to Sign Would Cement Our Union.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERNE, June 21.—A private message from Berlin, which reached me independently of the German censorship, says that at a secret conference between the German delegates, returned from France, and members of the Assembly, several of those present urged the acceptance of the Allies' conditions, alleging that the Allies were already disunited, and that if their conditions were accepted are likely to become still worse. If, however, Germany refuses the conditions, he urged, this would strengthen the Allies by cementing their union again.

In view of the uncertainty, crowds of Germans are attempting to cross the frontier into Switzerland. The Swiss Government today ordered the mobilization of about 6,000 additional troops to help those already guarding the German-

NEW CHARGES AGAINST DAY.

Ex-Senator Bennett Sends Letter of Complaint to Mayor.

Ex-State Senator William M. Bennett, as attorney for the West Side Taxpayers' Association, gave out a copy of a letter yesterday which he said he had sent to Mayor Hylan, containing charges against Dr. J. C. Day, Commissioner of Markets, and asking for his removal from office. The charges include:

That Commissioner Day violated Section 149 of the Charter by carrying on the business of his office by opening a private account in the Irving National Bank, instead of having transactions passed upon by the Controller's office; that he paid bills for several months with his own check, with the check of his secretary, and in cash, without obtaining a warrant from the Controller, countersigned by the Mayor; that he failed to have accounts approved by the Controller; that he paid bills without the Auditor's certificate, and that he incurred expense and made contracts before receiving appropriations to pay for them. Another charge set forth reads:

"He has loaded up his office with high-priced and useless deputies, and has wasted the funds of the city by increasing the payroll of his department when there was no necessity for it."

Other charges include the allegation that 400,000 pounds of fish became spoiled and proved a loss to the city and that litigation or possible litigation is likely to result against the city; that litigation is threatened by illegal contract for the purchase of ice and coal; that Commissioner of Accounts Hirshfield reported that Dr. Day caused to be established two private corporations known as the Plaza Community Club and The Mutual Finance and Exchange Market, Inc., with the intention of having these corporations operate on city property, to make "personal profit for the corporations." There are fourteen charges altogether. The last asserts that Commissioner Day wasted the funds of the city in conducting a store in the Municipal Building, where he sold food to city employes, and that the sales amounted to only a few hundred dollars each month while the expenses were almost as large as the total amount of the gross sales, and that he caused to be sold cold storage Southern eggs as "strictly fresh table eggs."

Commissioner Day, when the charges were read to him, said they were merely a repetition in substance of what was charged against him last Summer. He said a resolution of the Aldermen, signed by the Mayor, authorized him to open the account for the Department of Markets. Payment by personal check, said Dr. Day, lasted only a few months during an emergency, and the practice was adjusted when the Mayor's War Board was organized. He said other payments were made on the advice of the Corporation Counsel.

He denied incurring expense to the city in making contracts. He said it was not true that he had appointed useless deputies, and that the charge had been made by disgruntled market men because he had required them to pay increased rentals.

"The fish contract was not carried out because the contractors did not perform their part of it, but the city has not lost anything," he said. "The city has been a gainer by the coal purchase, and the ice situation was due to the fact that Ice Controller Odell would not permit us to receive and distribute it."

Colorado-Utah Rockies
Summer Land of snowy Peaks

Plan to take your vacation in the heart of the Rockies. Camping out, fishing, and other wilderness joys.

Here are two National Parks, six National Monuments and more than twenty million acres of National Forests.

Within the boundaries of Colorado alone are forty peaks, more than 14,000 feet high.

Summer Excursion Fares

Ask for the booklets you want. They describe Colorado and Utah Rockies, the two National Parks—Rocky Mountain and Mesa Verde—also the six National Monuments.

Ask the local ticket agent to help plan your trip—or apply to nearest Consolidated Ticket Office—or address nearest Travel Bureau, U. S. Railroad Administration, 646 Transportation Bldg., Chicago; 143 Liberty Street, New York; 602 Healey Bldg., Atlanta, Georgia.
